2 Americans Are Killed as Car Bomb Explodes at Air Base Near Frankfurt

FRANKFURT - A bomb hidden in a parked car exploded Thursday morning outside the leavily guarded headquarters of the U.S. Rhem-Main Air Base, killing two persons and injuring more than 20, the authorities said. No group claimed responsibility for the attack. But federal police said they were seeking 12 members of the Red Army Faction, the leftist terrorist group, in connection with the explosion.

The U.S. European Command headquarters in Stuttgart identified one of the dead as Airman First Class Frank H. Scarton, 19, of Woodhaven, Michigan, West German police said the second victim was an American woman.

More than 20 people injured in the explosion, most of them Americans, were treated and released at the Rhein-Main medical clinic the military said in Frankfurt. At least two other persons, one a West German woman, remained bospital-ized late Thursday.

Earlier, authorities said 16 or 17 persons had been injured.
Security, which always has been strict at the facility six miles (10 kilometers), from Frankfurt, was further injuried after the bloom of the control of the bloom of further rightened after the blast. In Washington, Larry Speaker the White House spokesman, read a statement condenning the attack. "Preliminary information available to us here indicates a violent radical group has targeted our military and other Western service personnel, as well as innocent civilians, for acts of violence," it said.

He said the United States would work closely with the West German local and federal authorities in their investigation.

Chancellor Helmut Kohl sent a cable to President Ronald Reagan, saying he would do everything pos-sible to find those responsible, United Press International reported from Bonn. When the subject of a meeting first was raised by the South African government two weeks ago, the State Department said there were no plans for one. Mr. Kalb said Mr. McFarlane was joined at the talks by Chester A. Crocker, the assistant secretary of state for African affairs. Mr. Crocker is the principal author of the U.S. policy of "constructive en-gagement," which is designed to keep channels of communication open with the Pretoria government to influence its policies. Mr. Kalb said he had no infor-

Anti-Sandinist Leaders Say Most Rebel Forces Are Back in Nicaragua

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras —

The leading anti-Sandinist rebel force, under new arrangements with the Honduran Army, has sent the bulk of its forces back across the border re-equipped to resume regular attacks against government targets inside Nicaragua, according to guerrilla leaders.

The large-scale movement into Nicaragua, confirmed by Hondu-ran and other sources here, is designed to end a seven-month period of relative inactivity imposed by the cutoff last year of financing from the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency, rebel leaders said.

Soviet Jewish Emigration Rose in July

GENEVA (UPI) — The Soviet Union allowed 174 Jews to emigrate in July, the highest monthly total in 31 months, the Intergovernmental Committee for Migration said Thursday.

July arrivals at the committee's reception center in Vienna brought the total this year to 675. There were 37 arrivals in June, the second-lowest

Most of the Soviet Jews who arrive in Vienna travel directly on to Israel. Others go to Rome to be processed for settlement in other countries, mainly the United States.

Summer 1945: Japan, Beaten but Intransigent, Prepares to Repel a U.S. Attack

WASHINGTON — In the summer of 1945, as U.S. military forces prepared to invade Japan, a Japanese high school girl named Yukiko Kasai was given a carpenter's awl and told to be prepared to use it as a weapon.

Even killing just one American will do, she was told.

You must prepare this awl for self defense. You must aim

The other conclusion was what the Japanese called gvokusai, "the shattering of jade." Every man, woman, and child would be mobilized and final hope would be placed in the kamikaze. "the wind of the gods." If that did not save the nation. Japan would perish.

For more than a year, the Tokyo government had quietly sought peace. But Japan's leaders had misjudged the military power arrayed against them and, blinkered by their insular politics, failed to grasp how to deal with the Western democracies.

In addition, the Allied policy of unconditional surrender stiffened Japanese resistance. It was an ill-defined demand, and uncertainty about the future dissuaded Japan from considering if. Perhaps more important, four years of deadly enunity gave the Japanese no reason to believe the Americans would be lenient in victory.

In January 1945, as the Americans started bombing in earnest, Tokyo drafted plans to repel an invasion. In February, the country was divided into six military districts to exercise control over the garrison of six million

The U.S. Dilemma: Ending the War

New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — By the summer of 1945 the United States had strategically won the war with Japan. But America faced a certain and severe clawing if it finished its enemy at close quarters.

The United States had achieved

total victory on the outlying island of Okinawa from April 1 to June 21. But the historian Ronald Spec-tor says that Okinawa had the curious effect of encouraging the Japanese and discouraging the Americans, who looked to an invasion of the Japanese main islands with "anxiety and dread."

An American force of 650,000 men, more than 4,000 planes and a naval armada were being assembled to invade the southern Japanese island of Kyushu on Nov. 1, after the typhoons of autumn sub-sided. The largest island, Honsbu, was to be hit in March 1946.

The landings were expected to initiate one of the greatest land battles in history, an amplification of previous Pacific campaigns that claimed the lives of 105,563 American and more than 300,000 Japanese fighting men, and great

Politicians were as concerned as military officers about casualties. President Harry S. Truman said at a planning session that he hoped the United States could prevent "an Okinawa from one end of Japan to the other."

The fight for Okinawa cost the numbers of Japanese civilians.

About 100,000 civilians had died and 5,000 sailors. It was the most on Okinawa alone. At Saipan, one costly naval engagement in U.S. history. Casualties, which included wounded, ran about 35 percent. If perhaps 56,000 dead.

Black Opinion in South Africa Is Split on Who Killed Lawyer

the junior law partners in the firm of Mxenge, Ngxingweni & Shezi, lock him up, even if it's President Victoria Mxenge, 43, was "more of a mother than a senior colleague."

They felt so warmly that they decided she should not travel alone to and from work after a warning from a civil rights organization, the United Democratic Front, which said it had received information about a hit list.

There was reason for concern. Four years earlier, Mrs. Mxenge's husband, Griffiths Mxenge, the founder of the law firm, was stabbed to death on his way home from the office.

The man who drove Mrs. Mixenge home was a witness to her murder Aug. 1 as she stepped from the car in Durban's Umlazi Town-

The man, Mcebisi Xundu, is a minister and a friend of the young lawyers. He said that four black men brushed past his car as Mrs. Mxenge stepped out with an armful of parcels. Mr. Xundu remembers near Graaff-Reinet in eastern Cape how she screamed and ran before Province and Duduza Township, they shot her and split open her east of Johannesburg.

Cundu said.

It is a view that is widely held in the black community, although vi-olent confrontation has frequently occurred between black groups over the last few years. Some peo-ple say they think that Mrs. Mxenge could have been a victim of feuding among blacks. Others insist the government is involved. A wave of anger at the slaying sparked rioting in the townships around Durban, which had been elatively free of unrest. The white authorities deny complicity or cover-up. "I don't protect Inkatha movement five years ago,

Black activists point out that there have been various mysterious killings of radicals, both black and white, over the last eight year. To date no arrests have been made in the killings. The police force has a high success rate in capturing black guerrillas.

The Detained Persons Support Committee, which monitors police actions under the stringent security laws, reported last month that six persons had been found mysteriously killed and that 27 had disappeared since September.

The dead include Matthew Goniwe, one of the country's most effective political organizers. The charred and mutilated bodies of Mr. Goniwe and three companions were found June 27 beside a road near Port Elizabeth.

No arrests have been made in that case; nor in two similar cases The government has denied

"Whoever did this, we are satisfied they are operating with the protection of the system," Mr. and the others might have been victims of black rivalry. Clashes have occurred between > members of the multiracial United Democratic Front and those of the black Azanian People's Organiza-tion, which shuns white participation in its fight against apartheid. The killing of Victoria Mxenge took place amid feuding between rival groups, blurring the activists' accusations of official complicity. Trouble flared between black radicals and members of Chief homeland. This plan brought pro-tests from radicals who oppose the homelands.

Mrs. Mxenge and Mr. Xuada, the man who was with her when she was killed, were at the center of this, conflict. Just two weeks before Mrs. Mxenge's death, Inkatha supporters attacked Mr. Xundar's church in Lamontville, where Democratic Front groups meet. Mr. Xundu said that when Mrs. Mxenge was shot he rushed to a police station a mile away. "When I got to the station," be said, "it took six or seven minutes. before some armed detectives got in a car and headed for the house. I followed them. By the time we got there Victoria's body had already been taken to the hospital.

Mr. Xundu is not the only one who thinks the system is implicated, so Mrs. Mxenge takes her place beside Mr. Goniwe as another black honored as a victim of apart-

Two weeks before her death, she hung a poster of Mr. Goniwe over her bed. Distributed at Mr. Goniwe's funeral, the poster read: "Stop apartheid killing."

Mrs. Mxenge, a nurse, was working in an Umlazi clinic when she met her husband, then a law student at Natal University. They were married in 1964, Soon afterward, Griffiths

Mxenge was sentenced to nine years in a prison on Robben Island for supporting the outlawed Afri-can National Congress. He completed his law studies in prison and, upon release, set up his practice in Durban and soon was qualified in 1981, became a junior partner in the firm.

Ten months later, the Mxenges left their office together but drove home in separate cars. He never arrived. The next morning his muti-lated body, with 45 stab wounds, was found in a stadium.

Mrs. Mxenge took over the law practice, modeling herself on her husband and quickly establishing an equal reputation as a vigorous defender of political prisoners.

Cardinal Maurice

In that short time over 24 million people have flown us. This has made People Express the fastest growing airline in the United States.

In fact, in the world. And starting September 8th, we're bringing to Europe the same simple concept: The most intelligent way of getting from one place to another. People Express now offers you daily non stop service on Boeing 747 jets from Brussels National Airport in Zaventem to Newark International Airport for an incredible $99*. And from Newark Airport it's just 20 minutes to Manhattan,

WE FLY TO A LOT OF PLACES FOR JUST A LITTLE.

Once in Newark, People Express offers a lot of connections to a lot of places. You see, at People Express, we don't think it's enough to offer low prices to just one city.

In short, People Express offers low prices every seat. Every flight. Every day. And absolutely no restrictions.

PAY FOR YOUR TICKET IN THE MOST CONVENIENT PLACE: ON THE PLANE.

At People Express, we think it's ridiculous to spend as much time in line as you do in the air. So you can make your reservation in advance with us and purchase your ticket right on the plane. We prefer American dollars but will accept Belgian francs at our prevailing exchange rate.

HOW DO WE DO IT?

By giving you the things you want. Daily flights; the ability to make reservations; prompt courteous service...in the air and on the ground, plus clean, comfortable Boeing jets.

And eliminating the things you didn't want but always had to pay for ... airline food for instance.

Of course, if you're willing to spend a little of all that money you're saving, you can buy a first rate snack or beverage on board.

YOU AND YOUR LUGGAGE NEED NEVER BE SEPARATED.

We've eliminated another of your pet peeves; waiting for your luggage. We not only allow you to carry your own luggage aboard the aircraft—we want you to. We provide you with an unusually spacious overhead and underseat area that can accommodate a garment bag (or small suitcase) and a briefcase. Or the equivalent. But if you have additional luggage -or luggage you want us to handle, we're happy to do it for $3 a bag.

OUR PREMIUM CLASS. SAVE MONEY IN STYLE.

It's the comfort you'd expect in First Class, but for only $450*.

Leather seats, two abreast. Fine crystal, china, silverware and linen. And service that is second to none. With every amenity available to you on an a-la-carte basis. People Express Premium Class is for the business traveler who knows that one of the best ways to make money is to save money.

AN OWNER IS NEVER MORE THAN A FEW STEPS AWAY.

From the person who welcomes you on the plane to the person who pilots the plane, each and every member of our staff owns thousands of dollars of our stock.

The result quite simply, is the first airline where attitude is as important as altitude.

THE PEOPLE EXPRESS PLEDGE.

Right here, in public, People Express makes this pledge. Our goal is, year in year out, to offer the lowest unrestricted airline prices and the highest value. Every seat. Every flight.

We offer you our promise that People Express will always be the smartest way of getting from one place to another.

"Prices quoted in U.S. dollars. Subject to government approval. In addition, a small surcharge may be added to these prices to cover exchange rate deficiencies. People Express Airlines/For Reservations Call In London: (0293) 38100; For Premium Class Reservations Call (0293) 25116. Prices effective through 9/30/85. Starting 10/1/85 through TI/13/85 coach fare will be $149.

Out of the Marcos Trap

It is rare for the staid American Bar Association to excoriate friendly foreign countries for human rights abuses. It has now done so in the scandalous instance of the Philippines, where lawyers who defend victims in political cases are mysteriously killed. At least three have been murdered and five arrested, one on the peculiar charge of "human rights lawyering."
As the rule of law totters in the Philippines, a Communist guerrilla movement grows, its chief asset being the rickety and corrupt regime of President Ferdinand Marcos. Mr. Marcos can shrug off the ABA protest and others like it for two bad reasons. The United States can do something about one of them. His own democratic opponents are so divid-ad that he has threatened them with an instant presidential election to prolong his 20-year rule. His other card is America's reliance on Clark Air Base and the naval base at Subic Bay. He used it again to fend off a prudent move in Congress to put more distance be-tween Washington and the Marcos dynasty.

The House voted to cut $75 million from a Reagan administration request for $100 million in military aid, while increasing economic aid from $95 million to $155 million — with the requirement that a fourth of food aid be channeled through private groups. Manila instantly threatened to abrogate the bases agree-ment, arguing that the $100-million military aid figure constituted "rent," which it does

Rather than call Mr. Marcos's bluff, House conferees yielded to Senate wishes, raising military aid to $70 million and agreeing to recommend, rather than require, that food aid be distributed by private groups. The problem of diversion of food aid should be taken seriously by the administration. There have been damaging charges of extensive overseas investments by senior Marcos officials.

A second wise step would be to begin an energetic search for alternate sites — Guam. Australia and Saipan among them — for the U.S. naval and air bases in the Philippines. As long as Mr. Marcos believes that Americans will swallow anything to keep those bases, be can disregard America's worried attempts to press for constitutional change.

Nor is military aid the first requirement in containing the insurgent challenge of the New People's Army. Its guns have come from the remment's demoralized and sometimes brutal army, and its most potent slogan is opposi-tion to the "U.S.-Marcos dictatorship."

Most Filipinos reject that linkage, and are still bound to the United States by language, culture and political tradition. To maintain them, the United States needs ways to escape a perate dictator's embrace.

A Slim Chance to Seize

In this space last Friday we talked about missed opportunities, the kind for which there is going to be much regret and nostalgia a short time hence when people realize that those opportunities are no more. The subject that day was reducing the budget deficit. The subject today is South Africa. But the underlying principle is the same. There is a slim, remote last chance to try to reach a peaceable and just resolution - but it is being kicked away.

We thought of it the moment we saw the picture and read the account of that brave man, Bishop Tutu, coming between the South African police and black mourners to prevent a bloody confrontation the other day. "Please allow us to bury our dead with dignity," he said. "Please do not rub our noses in the dust. We are already hurt; we are already down. Don't trample on us. We are human beings; we are not animals. And when we have a death, we cry like you cry." If things proceed as they have been proceeding and if the government continues its cruel and senseless policies, there will come a day when it will sorely wish that it had only to yield such things as Bishop Tutu has been asking — political freedom, dignity and decency — and that there were such peo-ple as Bishop Tutu with whom to negotiate.

The fact is that over the years Pretoria has obdurately and suicidally refused to recognize or credit legitimate, peaceful civil protest on the part of nonviolent blacks. It met such protests with violence, repression, gunfire and lockups. It has done everything it could think of to weaken the hand and undermine the leadership of those whom it should devoutly wish to be the leaders of the restless, growing black resistance to apartheid. Most recently President Botha declined a meeting with Bish-op Tutu. The moderate leaders of Desmond Tutu's generation are being defied and often ridiculed by their own young for the scant results, as the younger ones see it, of their moderation and insistence on nonviolence. you must believe that in a short time white South Africa will look back with real regret on these lost days and vanished opportunities.

In America we have reached a policy stalemate. Within the president's own party there is some objection to moving toward a stronger condemnation of apartheid in general and of the South African government's misguided new wave of repression in particular. Outside his administration, on the left and to a considerable extent in the center as well, there is increasing dissatisfaction with the so-called "constructive engagement" policy of the past several years, a belief that it has yielded little. Congress, before it left town, sent the president a bill that would impose relatively modest sanctions against South Africa. Mr. Reagan has spoken of vetoing it, but he is leaving the matter open for discussion. We have never favored the disinvestmen program that many have advocated over the years, believing that it would hurt its intended beneficiaries, South Africa's blacks. The current legislation seems to us to contain much milder and more reasonable measures than what was once in the works. It also seems to us that, despite all the argument that has been going on, there is a fairly broad general consensus available on the kind of pressures that should be applied to hasten the end of racial repression in South Africa, and that this consensus extends from within the Reagan administration to many of the critics on the outside. There is common ground there that could be seized upon, so that a single, strong American policy could be fashioned

Nothing is more important at this time. America must not, at so critical a moment, descend into an internal political squabble over what it should be doing. The American opportunity is now, and it may not come again. The country must speak with conviction and a clear voice and use its influence to press the South African government away from a mad and morally squalid course. It is possible for the administration and Congress to agree; they are not that far apart. Bishop Tutu speaks but who insist on freedom and decency. That is what the United States should be for.

To Many, Helsinki Means Hope

In their 10 years, the Helsinki accords have rovided a railying point for people struggling for freedom and peace. They have done so by encouraging private citizens in all European countries to "know and act upon their rights" by monitoring their governments' behavior.

True, many who took up this challenge soon became victims themselves. Yet courageous individuals continue to speak out, bearing witness to the sufferings of others. I have seen the Helsinki spirit at work in meetings in Moscow, Prague, Warsaw, Budapest, Bucharest, Belgrade and Istanbul. Voices may lower, but eyes light up when the word "Helsinki" is mentioned. To these people, Helsinki means hope.

If the United States were to pull out of the Helsinki process, it would be abandoning these people and others like them who put their faith in the accords, sacrificing their freedom and sometimes their lives. It would be squandering the moral force the Helsinki accords have acquired as a result of those sacrifices. For the Russians, the withdrawal would be an ideological victory.

- Jeri Laber, executive director of Helsinki Watch, a New York-based human rights group, writing in The New York Times.

Notwithstanding the Helsinki Final Declaration, and despite the recently arranged East-West summit, Europe remains divided and nothing will change this so long as Moscow denies freedom to its subject-nations. The West has no alternative but to maintain adequate defensive deterrence to the totalitarian threat, while preserving its own freedom as an attractive and potentially infectious alternative. Within this scenario, which will inevitably lead to conflicts, the "Helsinki process" can perform a limited function, and may even exert a degree of civilizing influence.

FROM OUR AUG. 9 PAGES, 75 AND 50 YEARS AGO

1910: Why Shouldn't Turkey Arm? PARIS -[Today's editorial says:] "Diplomatic and naval circles have been following the negotiations that have ended in the sale of German warships to Turkey. Why should Turkey be forbidden to build up a naval force? Is she not following the example of the most civilized nations? For decades the English press and English demagogues have been preaching the necessity of reform to Turkey. Now that she is beginning to reform, do they realize that they have made a mistake? Turkey under the old régime was a menace to no Power. But a reformed Turkey, with a well organized army and an efficient navy, and a population animated by a newly awakened sentiment of national pride, may cause England to regret the old state of affairs."

1935: French Workers Fight Decrees PARIS - Strikes and demonstrations against government wage-cutting decrees brought out-breaks of increased violence in two naval bases in France [on Aug. 8], while the walkout at Le Havre continued to hold liners at their piers. At least two persons were killed in Toulon in a clash between arsenal workers and police. At least 80 were injured. Brest, after a day of calm, saw fresh demonstrations which result in several being injured when Mobile Guards sought to disperse a large mob. Meanwhile, the second batch in the series of decrees by which the French government hopes to eliminate the budget deficit, reduce the cost of living and unemployment, lower interest rates and stimulate business generally were approved and signed by President Albert Lebrun.

Realistically: The Way to Stop Is to Stop

HIROSHIMA — When I found my mother, her whole body was burned. I couldn't tell where her eyes were, her nose, her ears. But even where her eyes were, her hase here to take but even though she was dying, she was happy to know I was there. And I was lucky to see her before she died. — Mrs. Masako Hironaka, 71, resident of the Atomic Bomb Survivors' Nursing Home.

Since the Hiroshima and Nagasaki bombs in 1945, the United States has manufactured 60,000 nuclear warheads of 71 different types, for use in 116 weapons systems. The cost so far has been $750 billion. So far ...

America is now spending more to make nuclear warbeads than it did on the Manhattan Project, the emergency atomic effort of World War II. That cost a little over $16 billion in terms of current dollars. The MX missile will cost over $30 billion before it is done; the Trident submarine and its missiles as much as $100 billion. Those figures come from an article in the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists by Robert S. Norris, Thomas B. Cochran and William M. Arkin. It tells us in unemotional prose that eight types of U.S. nuclear warheads are in produc-tion, with a total of 30 types in the stockpile. The stockpile contains 25,500 warheads.

That is the American side. The Russians have almost as many warheads. The roughly 50,000 nuclear warheads now on Earth carry an explosive force more than one million times the power of the bomb that devastated Hiroshima. It is enough to destroy the world many times over.

By Anthony Lewis

We have become numb, most of us, to the figures on weapons, megatonnage, overkill. They are enormous abstractions, beyond our imagination, beyond our control. In our numbness, we leave the problem to the politicians - and they say we must have more, newer, better weapons. in Hiroshima the abstractions are reduced to human scale again. There are no words to express what happened here; the survivors themselves say they cannot convey what they experienced. But their understated accounts tell enough. One thinks not of megatons or counterforce or war games but of human beings.

People prefer to express their grief privately here, visiting the Peace Park at dawn with flowers or incense. But they feel they must use the experience of Hiroshima to work for world peace. On this 40th anniversary of the bomb they invited mayors from around the world to campaign for nuclear disarmament. A declaration read at the commemorative ceremony on Tues-day called on the United States and the Soviet ion to stop nuclear tests.

In the realpolitik of Washington, the meetings and resolutions of Hiroshima may have seemed hopelessly naive. But who are the realists in fact? Consider the nuclear test issue. In brushing aside the Soviet proposal for a test moratorium, President Reagan said the United States would consider a ban on tests after "[we] catch up."

That notion is just what has produced 40 years of pointless escalation. Fear that the other side is

Restraining the President: State Has to Be Cautious

By Raymond Price

WASHINGTON — Presidents always grow frustrated with State-Department bureaucracy, and their most ideological supporters find that same bureaucracy even more frustrating than presidents do.

The ideological right is now waging a concerted attack on Secretary of State George Shultz. He is an improbable conservative villain, but the right's attack is not surprising. Nor is the central indictment: that he has is a captive of 2 ment bureaucracy and thus the key figure thwarting a conservative president's foreign policy objectives.

Conservatives inherently distrust

the career Foreign Service because of their perception - often correct that it attracts and promotes a disproportionately high ratio of political liberals. But conservative presidents are not alone in their frustration with the Foreign Service. One of the recent sidents most vocal in his disdain for its timidity was John F. Kennedy. The basic conflict here is not ideological but institutional.

No Choice But to Shift The Burden

By Benjamin J. Cohen M EDFORD. Massachusetts—
Istin America's debt problem is back in the bendfines. In Cuba. Fidel Castro is calling for a suspen-sion of all debt payments by Lata states. In Peru, incoming Paradent Alan Garcia Perez has anciatorally set a limit on the debt service that his country will pay foreign credit-ors. Politics is rapidly shortening the fuse of the debt bomb.

Ga Wind-

For months, financial con tors have been assuring us that the debt bomb had been defused. They thought so because they focused only on the economics of the crisis, oneon the economics of the crief, con-veniently ignoring the political di-mension. Nothing could have been more dangerous. As the Latina are now making quite clear, the chaffange is as much diplomatic as commercial. At the heart of the problem is a political question: Who should bear the burden of adjustment? Until now the deboors have been children to the burden of agustment? Omn ace the debtors have been obliged to shoulder most of the burden, through anstenity and reduced living standards prescribed by the International Monetary Fund. Few concessions have been to the control from either the been to the control of the con banks or creditor countries.

The results of the IMF's tough domestic "stabilization" programs have not been unimpressive. In 1984 the payments deficits of most of the debtor nations fell dramatically, mer-chandise trade showed a collective surplus and domestic output expanded by about 4 percent on average -twice the rates achieved in 1982 and 1983. These results were not achieved without cost, however. Most of the improvement in trade came through reduced imports rather than expandremoved in the previous decade, and while living stan-dards did recover slightly in 1984, they still remain far below levels achieved in the previous decade.

In effect, domestic development has been postponed indefinitely for the sake of preserving credit-worthness in international financial markets. Despite these determined efforts, however, very little new money has been forthcoming from private sources. As a result, debtors now find themselves transferring resources outward, to creditor countries and their banks. In 1984 that outflow amounted to some $15 billion. That was nearly 10 percent of the debtors' total export revenues.

Patience is the key, debtors are told: Their development will gradually resume if only they keep playing by the rules. If the debtors stick to their stabilization programs, the IMF says, their payments deficits will continue to decline, exports will rise and output will continue to grow by some 4 percent a year. Eventually, it is asserted, these improvements will spark serted, these improvements will spark "spontaneous" new bank lending.

The risk, of course, is that the pot will reach the boiling point before that time. Annual output growth of 4 percent will not provide significant increases in per capita living standards. Worse, the IMF's projections imply years of net outward transfers of resources by less developed na-tions that should be importing capi-

are being asked to subsidize the rich — to make painful sacrifices to keep banks from suffering losses — and all for the sake of new financing that may bever materialize. As this perception spreads, the pot heats up, raising the risk that more Latin lead-ers will heed Fidel Castro's words or follow Alan Garcia's example.

In reality, the only way the debt bomb will be defused is if banks and creditor countries agree to shoulder more of the burden of adjustment. More concessions are needed. Banks must be prepared to rewrite out-standing debt on more favorable terms and perhaps to write off their most dubious loans, even though this would mean a "hit" on current earnings. Creditor countries must be prepared to help cushion the resulting losses, even though this would mean some cost to taxpayers, too.

Why do this? Not for some vague principle of internationalism of equity. Such concessions are in the interest of banks and creditor coun-tries, too. Creditor countries would gain, as the very real risk of financia uption was reduced. Banks would gain, as debtors' capacity to service their obligations was enhanced. And the debtors would gain, as development and lending resumed. Only then could we breathe more easily. This is not charity but common sense.

The writer, professor of international economic affairs at Tufts University's. Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy, contributed this to The New York Times fair and hardly accurate. Democracy and political representation have come a long way since the Knomin-tang moved to Taiwan in 1949.

Taiwan was a Japanese colony for 50 years before it was returned to China in 1945. During the Japanese occupation, the Chinese on Taiwan had no political freedom whatsoever. Today 70 percent of the Knomin-tang's two million members are native Taiwanese, and they are steadily rising up the ranks of government. If the 75-year-old president, Chiang Ching-kuo, were for some reason un-able to complete his term, he would be succeeded by a native Taiwanese, Vice President Lee Teng-hni.

Democracy may not be perfect in Taiwan, but when the rate of progress is compared with that in other developing nations, it certainly cannot be considered slow. As the economy and education improve, one can expect this drive toward greater representation and participation to continue.

About 'They' and 'We': Polish Writers And the Underground

by Michael T. Kaufman

ARSAW — The most sought-after book in Warsaw these days is an extraordinary, illicitly produced volume called "They." Its only rivals among the unofficially published books that have proliferated in Poland over the last formatter. the last few years have been "A History of Solidarity" and "Konspira," a compilation of the self-critical recollections of fugitive leaders of Solidarity's clandestine wing "They" has been so popular that the free-market price of the 256-page, small-print paperback is roughly one-tenth of a doctor's monthly salary; copies, secured through se-cret-police-dodging book runners, are lent or even rented out, carefully wrapped in paper to avoid soiling.

Essentially, "They" is a dialogue, or rather an interrogation, of seven old and for the most part disgraced Communist leaders who collaborated with their Soviet mentors in the first decades after World War II to advance an ideology of atheism, centralization, police authoritarianism and farm collectivization on a largely unwilling, mostly Roman Catholic, significantly anarchistic and romantic nation. The interviews were conducted and taped by Teresa Toranska, a pro-Solidarity journalist, who in the course of her questions reveals that her father was deported to the Soviet Union when the people she interviewed were in power.

If the subjects of Toranska's interviews are "they" - exponents of alien beliefs who are now shunned even by their political heirs then Toranska's aggressively interroga-tive voice is that of Poland's "we," a nation of often quarrelsome citizens who periodi-cally, as in the case of Solidarity, come together in defiance of oppression. It is a nation where, after 40 years of virtual mo-nopoly by the Communist Party on education, propaganda and information, mannal workers kiss women's hands, scorn the word "comrade" and regularly go to church, thus affirming the difference between "we" and Toranska's book does much the same thing. But in addition to confirming national self-esteem, it has real value as a work of history. For perhaps the first time in any Communist country, leaders who have not defected or recanted reveal - often with defensive self-justification - how they manipulated, cheated, threatened, denounced, imprisoned and condequated in the name of power and in the hope of molding history. These pages of transcribed tape recordings contain admissions that the 1946 referendum paving the way for the Communist Poland were in fact established in Moscow and implemented by Russians, and that killings, persecution and torture were condoned as historical necessities. . .

OOKS like "They" and "Konspira." Binyolving reminiscences, memoirs and history, are much more common in Poland and, it would seem, more widely read, than fiction. "Konspira," for example, has set off a debate in Solidarity circles as to whether the disclosures of those who set up clandestine networks for dues collection, radio broadcasts and literature distribution were unnecessarily indiscreet. The atmosphere is thick with open letters, manifestos and pamphlets, as well as much poetry. Works combining political commentary with moral philosophy abound; Adam Michnik, now serving a two-and-a-half year sentence for advocating an aborted 15-minute strike. is often praised not only for his political arguments but for his literary style. He is compared by some Poles to Tom Paine, by others to John Smart Mill.

others to John Stuart Mill.

Some months ago, while Michnik was in detention awaiting trial, his fiancee, Barbara Szwedowska, took a Western reporter to a performance of mildly political songs from the 1960s, including one that asks, "What would Mr. Adam and Mr. Juliusz be writing today?" The reference was to Adam Mickie-wicz and Juliusz Słowacki, the 19th-century poets and prophetic nationalists whose visions and romantic deeds continue to define Polish literary life. In that theater, with Szwedowska in the audience and the actors singing about Mr. Adam and Mr. Juliusz, the sense of historical continuity, always a factor in Poland, became even more acute. Michmk's first clash with the law came in those same '60s, when he protested the cancellation of a play by Mickiewicz; the play had been ordered suspended in response to Soviet diplomats' complaints at its portrayal of czarist officials as colonialists.

Between prison terms, Michnik served at one point as secretary to the late Antoni Slonimski, a renowned poet who stood in the tradition of Mickiewicz and Slowacki and was a precussor of today's greatest Polish poets, the Nobel laureate Czeslaw Milosz and Zbigniew Herbert. There was a palnable recognition in the theater that if Mr. Adam and Mr. Juliusz were alive today they would be writing about the same things that con-cern Michnik, Milosz and Herbert: freedom, destiny, nation, hope and redemption.

Some days later, Tadeusz Konwicki, Poland's best-known novelist, explained the moral obligations of literature in his country over lunch. "What you have to understand," said the author of "The Polish Complex," "A Dreambook for Our Time" and, most re-cently, "Underground River," "is that for almost 200 years we have judged our writers not by what they wrote but by how they behaved at the barricades."

It is again a case of "they" and "we," with the line drawn in this instance between those who are published officially and those whose works are produced by the clandestine publishing houses, between those who belong to the official writers' union and those who do not. In the eyes of much of literate Polish society, Konwicki is on the right side of the barricades. He is not a member of the writers' union and has offered his last books for publication by underground printers. His fiction, often characterized as absurdist in tone, is in the author's view only a mirror of the world in which he writes: "I am not a fabulist, I am a realist, it is life in Poland that is absurd." Just back from a visit to Australia and the United States, he is working on an autobiographical book that describes his role in a wartime resistance group in his native Vilna (now in Lithuania) and his arrival in Warsaw after the war.

Another writer who finds himself somewhat reluctantly at the barricades is Marek Nowakowski, who has just published a col-lection of short stories, "The Canary," in English translation. These days Nowakowski gives a lot of readings in churches and he, too, offers his work to clandestine publishers, a fact that no doubt contributed to the short period he spent under arrest last

His stories — about drunks, lovers with-out apartments and taxi drivers — are politi-cal only insofar as life in Poland is political. He is not overjoyed by the issues dividing his society. "Personally," he said, "I do not think a writer should stand with anyone, neither with Solidarity nor the government. But given the split into official and unofficial literary cultures, he sees practical as well as moral edvantages to the uncensored publish-

In the official culture," he said, "there are three focal points: the writer, the publisher and the censor. In addition to the problems of conscience this situation creates, it is cumbersome, and the minimum time required for a book to appear is two years. In the unofficial culture the process is quicker and cleaner." The flexibility of that culture was revealed when a collection of the Reverend Jerzy Popieluszko's sermons was produced within a month of his murder by secret police officials.

Recently, the police have stepped up their pursuit of illicit publishers. Every week there are reports of people being arrested as "kol-porters," or bookleggers. Trucks on the roads on Sundays are regularly stopped by police searching for shipments of paper, which is officially rationed and controlled.

Out on the Celtic Fringe

by Stephen Williams

ORIENT, France - The Cells invaded southern Brittany this week. scorching the earth with music and ravaging the pedestrian malls with

The pipe-playing, harp-plucking tribes came from the four well-known corners of the Celtic Fringe — Scotland, Ireland, Wales and Brittany — and from three "nations" that would seem to qualify for the event just under the wire - Cornwall, the Isle of Man and Galicia, in northwestern Spain,

Lorient, in the wooded and wind-swept Morbihan region about 160 kilometers (100 miles) up the jagged coast west from Nantes, is the annual venue for this gathering of the turbulent Celtic cousinhood, the Festival Interceltique, which is more than just fish soup and folklore.

For 10 days (and nights), 4,500 musicians, singers, dancers, artists, writers and athletes have asserted their Celtitude in the concert halls, public parks, cafes, saloons and streets of this city of 65,000. The uprising — this year's is the 15th — ends this weekend with the Breton Pipe Band Championships and on Sunday, the Grand Parade of the Celtic Nationhood is the key, and along with the songs, art shows and liquid cheer, there is a feeling here of an identity in search of a country. Yet, besides their position clinging to the headlands of Western Europe, the richness and similarities of their folk music and mythology, and their legendary 12month rainy season, what has brought the seven "nations" together under the as-yetuncreated banner of Celtia?

Jean-Pierre Pichard, secretary-general of the festival's organizing committee, puts it down to the long history of the un-Roman-ized, insular Celts — the Romans barely penetrated Wales, walled-off the Highland Scots, or Picts, and never attempted to meet the Irish head-on. This excentricity was carried over to Brittany when the Anglo-Saxons proved too hot to handle, and then on to Galicia. And in their remaining redoubts, the Celtic character was preserved.

"They have always been minorities lost in the extreme west of Europe with their own specific culture," says Pichard, who sees the common bond among them as the boulevard maritime, the ocean, and the Festival Interceltique as a "communion of the peoples of

But although the Celtic Connection is obvious enough in some ways, such as kilts and fiddles, there are differences as broad as the Celtic Sea and as sharp as the Irishman's celebrated wit.

Does Celtitude signify the preservation of an ancient language group, a musical tradi-tion, a certain nostalgia for a "country" or a shared gloom over a lost historical cause? The unhappy (for the Celts) fact that all of the major regions of Celtia have suffered from their powerful and better-organized neighbors since the Middle Ages does not in itself make for the strong sense of solidarity that raises its shaggy head here every August.

Take language, and the Welsh, for example, take it very seriously: Cenedl heb iaith, cenedl heb galon (A nation without language is a nation without heart). But how many tongue-lashings do children of the Fringe get nowadays in the original Scots-Gallic-Manx-Irish-Welsh-Breton? The festival's map of the seven "nations" was color-coded by a whimsical cartographer with the Celt's typical disdain for mere truth. A tourist from Vienna or Milan, searching for cultural, geographical or any Among those seized recently were people links among the western tribes would find Continued on page 9 that the map includes all of Scotland, Irelinks among the western tribes would find land, Wales and Brittany, plus the lesser three. Linguistically, this is nonsense, and by no stretch of even the luxurious Celtic imagination could Edinburgh, Dublin and Cardiff be described as speaking anything but a highly colored brand of English, while it is doubtful that Rennes, the Breton capital on the eastern edge of the province, has ever heard Breton spoken outside the walls of its university. And the last native Cornish speaker (Cornish is related to Welsh and Breton in the Brythonic branch of the Celtic family) took a whole culture to the grave in the late 18th century.

Putting the shot, Celtic style.

7 ORTHY efforts at language revival notwithstanding, Wales, the country that has best guarded the secret of keeping an old tongue alive in the face of foreign attempts to cut it out, has lost Welsh-speakers over the years and now just over 20 percent of the population of 2.8 million can properly pronounce a word like ynfydrwydd (foolishness). Scottish Gallic (the Scots use "Gallic" to differentiate their brand of the Goidelic branch of the Celtic group from "Gaelic," which the Irish, in turn, logically eschew in favor of "Irish") holds on by its fingernails to the Western Highlands and Islands, while the native Irish speakers do the same desperate balancing act along their indented coastline from Kerry to Donegal. The teaching of Irish is, on the other hand, entrenched in the republic's schools. Brittany is divided linguistically by a wavy north-south line, with the western part bretonnant, or Breton speaking, and the east all French. From a million Breton speakers 15 years ago, the number has dwindled to about half that today. Then, there are the Manx. Once upon a time, an Irish giant, probably angered at the results of a Glasgow Rangers-Celtic soccer match, scooped up a piece of Irish turf and hurled it in the general direction of Scotland: It landed about halfway between the docks of Liverpool and the shipyards of Belfast and became the Isle of Man. Now, the Manx did speak a dialect of Irish, brought by Saint Patrick's missionaries, and even the Vikings' tough methods of persuasion could not convince them to change, until the 19th century relegated the Manx language to scholars and

Here again, as in Coruwall, the revivalist spirit has gained precious ground in the last 10 years or so, helped by night-school class-es, language associations and events such as the Lorient fling.
For Pichard, 39, who is director of the Regional Conservatory of Brittany, a bas-tion of traditional music, the festival has given the Fringe a greater sense of confidence. "The Celts have lost their complexes," he says. Such a problem might come as news to the Scots or Irish, especially the stern-faced members of the Upper Crossgare Pipe Band from Northern Ireland, who, in full war paint, skirled through the streets of

Modern Art Museums: Too Much of the Same Thing

by John Russell

N my line of work, I get to go to a great many museums of modern art. I prowl through them, one and all, with an undiminished curiosity. But sometimes, after a week or two on the road, I catch myself forgetting which one I happen to be in. There can be nothing of that sort at the Pompidou Center, where the celebrated silvery light and an incomparable series of distant views says "Paris!" loud and clear. But when there are no windows and no natural light, and when the museum cafe is much the same, the museum bookshop is much the same, and even the public is much lulling quality sets in. There is no question at such times of "If it's Frank Stella, it must be Amsterdam," or "If it's Baselitz, it's Barcelona." Frank Stella and Georg Baselitz are everywhere - consecrated, mandatory, inescapthe same, and above all the collection is much the same, a certain

To a degree that was not paralleled even 30 years ago, the same quite small band of living artists gets into virtually every museum of modern art. The question is not so much whether the museum will have a de Kooning, a Calder, a Henry Moore, a George Segal, a Francis Bacon, a Jasper Johns, a Roy Lichtenstein, an Anselm Kiefer, a Francesco Clemente or a Julian Schnabel, as whether it will have the pick of the crop or one that is not so great.

Behind these, in terms of chronology, the list of accepted marvels is likely to include a Pollock, a Newman, a Rothko, a Gorky, a late Guston, a Dubuffet and a late Picasso. From recent years there may well be a Brice Marden, a Donald Judd, a Carl Andre, a Soi LeWitt, an R. B. Kitaj, a Cy Twombly, a Richard Long, a Gilbert and George, a Robert Ryman, a Sandro Chia, an Enzo Cucchi, a Richard Serra, a Jennifer Bartlett, an Elizabeth Murray, a Susan Rothenberg, an A. R. Penck, a David Salle and a Robert Longo.

Permutations can be rung on these lists, and there is never a lack of new candidates, but fundamentally this is the kind of team that goes to bat for living art. It is a very good team, but when we meet it the world over, from Los Angeles to Eindhoven in the Netherlands and from New York to the Ludwig museum in Aachen, West Germany, it finally ceases to surprise.

It is, in fact, the buildings, and not what we see in them, that are full of surprises. Where museums of older art differ hugely in the range and depth of their interests, museums of modern art on the whole do not. They operate as if all had become known, once and for all, and as if recent art were, in fact, "a given," in relation to which not much maneuver was possible. This is not how it was when the Barnes Collection was being built up in the suburbs of Philadelphia. or the Phillips Collection in Washington,

Those were wayward assortments, personal down to the last doorknob, and the regular visitor to modern museums must wonder whether things have changed for the worse, or for the better, and why it should be, in either case. It is true that Dr. Albert C. Barnes and Mr. and Mrs. Duncan Phillips were spending their own money and did not have to adapt or adjust to anyone else. Even so, a different aesthetic was in operation, and we have to ask what has been lost if it can no longer go to work.

I first faced the change at full strength when at table a few summers ago with Rudi Fuchs, director of the Eindhoven Museum, who at the time was organizing the last "Documenta" exhibition in Kassel, West Germany. Much to the discomfiture of some of those present, he said, "There are no undiscovered artists!" Whether or not he meant it literally, it is true that many museums now seem to operate on that principle. It is a situation that necessarily disappoints the vast majority of living artists.

Fuchs, a galvanic Dutchman, was at that moment on German soil. Hardly had we returned home than we received in the mail an eightvolume set of books on younger German artists — more than 300 in all — who had a certain status in their immediate locality. Much of what they did was a faithful imitation of the fashionable styles of the day. Still, some of the elsewhere unsung artists in question looked to be just as good as the handful of German painters who have lately turned up everywhere. (Some of them were women, too, which is not the case with the few who are now in high favor.)

O what is it that gives certain artists so conspicuous an edge? Is it superior energy, superior marketing, superior connections, personal magnetism or a combination of all these things with a little luck thrown in? Are there within the current situation elements of conspiracy, corruption, favoritism, quick money and (here and there) a governmental push? Or are the best artists the best, without qualifications, and recognized as such?

If we take these notions seriatim, I for one have no doubt that artists today can and do penetrate the armored eiderdown of public indifference in ways that did not exist even 30 years ago. There is an enormous public that is eager for the new and doesn't want to miss out on it. Gifted artists of our time find this intoxicating - why shouldn't they? - and undeniably it gives some of them a built-in booster that makes them develop fast, at the risk (often posited in envy and hatred, but also sometimes in sympathy and compassion) of burning themselves out in a year or two.

As for art dealing, it has certainly changed beyond recognition since Ambroise Vollard stocked up with Cezannes and sat on them, apparently half asleep, until he felt like selling one. Gone forever, likewise, are the procedures of Daniel-Henry Kahnweiler, the German-born Parisian dealer who at one time had the exclusivity of Picasso, Braque. Léger and Juan Gris but who never advertised, never had an opening and never offered anyone so much as a cup of

For better or worse, the art trade today is a multinational affair, an improved and microscosmic version of the United Nations in which everything works to mutual advantage. To name even some of the dealers who excel at this can only be invidious, but anyone who monitors the activity of such New York dealers as Leo Castelli, Ileana Sonnabend, Xavier Fourcade, Paula Cooper, Arnold Glimcher of the Pace Gallery, Lawrence Rubin of Knoedler's and Andrè Emmerich will sense what it is to have the international touch.

These people have their counterparts in London, Paris, Berlin, Basel and elsewhere. They function not only as dealers, where their artists are concerned, but as bankers, brokers, translators, marriage counselors, bookkeepers, unpaid therapists, travel agents and wizards at real estate. Contrary to what is often said, there is nothing wrong with artists making the kind of income that lawyers, brokers, bankers, venture capitalists, entrepreneurs and chairmen of the board take for granted. There are still many people who think,

The Risky Business of Anchovy Fishing

ORT VENDRES, France — The sangria-colored Catalan sun rose over the docks as the sardine and anchovy boats began rolling in. As on every morning from March to October, Guy Roque was there precisely at 7, to greet the anchovy fishermen as they returned from their I I-hour night journey into the Mediter-

As the tattered but trusty blue wooden boat approached the harbor minutes from the French-Spanish border, Roque - who owns the major anchovy-curing business in nearby Collioure - stopped conversation in mid-sentence. There was a sense of resigned despair in his voice.

"No anchovies today. See, they're bypassing the docks. They didn't catch a thing."

PATRICIA WELLS

and his voice trailed off. This year, he's talking of a "rupture totale," that is, last year's stock is nearly depleted, and replacements are very slow in coming.

The anchovy business is a tough business.

One would think that simple gambling would be easier on the nerves, and just as profitable.

But for French anchovy fishermen like Jean-Claude Siauvaud, who is contracted to sell his entire catch to Roque, it's a way of life, and from his point of view, one that suits him just fine, thank you.

"In a good year, we'll bring in 200 tons. A bad year, 30. On a good night's fishing, my boat can haul in 50 tons, easily. "Yesterday, I returned with nearly four tons; today, nothing," he says, just off the boat, a few days' growth of beard shading his tanned, 42-year-old face.

The gamble is this. You can go out from this port, travel an hour or so into the Medi-terranean and fish for sardines. You're all but guaranteed to come back with a boat laden with silvery, fat, beautiful fish. If a lot of other fisherman didn't go out that night, you'll get two francs a kilo for your catch. If a lot of men decide to fish along with you, you may not be able to sell what you bring

With anchovies, it's different. Everyone wants them. They'll pay 8, maybe 10 francs a kilo, wholesale. Anchovies are smaller and more delicate than sardines, they cure well. they've been deemed precious since the days of the Greeks and Romans. But, of course, the catch is more risky.

The anchovies, say the fishermen, are there. The problem — as with every crop that man has ever tried to harvest — is the weath-

"Last night, there were anchovies every-where," explained Siauvaud over an early morning cup of coffee at the fisherman's bar. "But the water was too turbulent to bring them in. What we'd earn on the anchovies we'd have to spend replacing our nets." So the story goes. Every night at 9, he and his crew of 12 set off in his oak-framed boat - built in Casablanca 24 years ago - and travel for four hours into the sea until they reach anchovy territory. Fishing au lampero, with a light that attracts and gathers the fish, they bring the fish together into one place. If the seas are calm, no problem. They bring in their nets, gather the fish, then make the four-hour journey back to Port Vendres.

But often the seas are turbulent. The nets would be destroyed and their livelihood in jeopardy. So on those nights, most nights, they return with an empty boat, hungry, tired, yet ready to go out again the next evening for another try. It's no surprise that 15 years ago, 25 or so boats set out from Port Vendres each evening. Now there are eight. In the traditional anchovy capital of Collioure, just a few kilometers away, the anchovy curing, packing, selling goes on in the Roque atelier. This is a most artisanal factory where 10 or so local women sit m an upstairs loft - tiled appropriately in sea blue - and filet anchovies onto absorbant brown paper or pack canning jars with whole, salted fish, chatting about the wearher, gossiping and smiling.

Beneath them in humid, cool caves, rests last year's catch. As the small, blue-tinged fish come in, they are packed immediately in coarse sea salt and layered in large steel barrels. The anchovies rest there for anywhere from four days to a month, depending on who has time to deal with them. As the anchovies cure and age, they form their own brine, and soon they float in a heady, salty, marine-fragrant mixture.

AFTER a first curing, the beads are taken off by hand, the anchovies are eviscerated. They are returned to the barrels with a new batch of sait, where they should ripen for at least three months, but will cure just fine for up to one year.

Later, as time permits, they are filleted and cured in olive oil or in vinegar, or left whole and cured yet again in a sprinkling of salt. The Catalan anchovies are shipped all. over France, sold in open-air markets along with olives, but are really best purchased on the spot, at Roque's little retail shop along the entrance to the enchanting port town of Collioure, just a few minutes from the Spanish border, a 20-minute drive from the French city of Perpignan.

What to look for in a well-cured anchovy? The tiny Mediterranean fish begins its life with a flesh of pure white. As the salt cores and ages the flesh, it turns a fine, rosy red, much like a well-cured ham. The best cured anchovies are purchased whole, packed in salt. At bome, they can be rinsed off, soaked in cold water for about 15 minutes, then filleted, to be used in salads, pizzas, in comhination with roasted red peppers or as a stuffing for roasted potatoes.

Of course in Collionre - the ancient anchovy port, which was replaced in the 1960s by Port Vendres as fishing methods changed — anchovies are found everywhere. Most restaurants offer a variety of preparations, including salads of salt-cured anchovies sprinkled with sherry vinegar and served, necessarily, with a few chopped up hardcooked eggs or fresh anchovies sprinkled with olive oil and herbs.

The best places to sample the local fare include La Frégate and Hostellerie des Templiers — both of which have rooms and offer sidewise views of the ocean from their terraces—and La Bodega, a popular, typically Catalan hangout owned by the city's mayor. At Le Frégate, an additional treat is the crème Catalan, an exceptional caramelized cream dessert filled with flecks of licorice.

While visiting Collioure, take time for the spectacular 20-minute walk along the rocky waters, heading left from the beach at the tail end of Quai de l'Amiranté along a narrow paved walkway. Here, if you like, you can scrape wild black mussels off rocks, watch French Army units practicing death-defying maneuvers over the inlets that cut in from the sea, or just wander until you reach the end of the trail and turn back to Collioure. In the town - which is likely to be overpopulated with campers and tourists from July 15 to Sept. 15—there are also a few shops devoted to Catalan specialities, in-cluding dancers' espadrilles (charming ones for children, embroidered with dancers, whether consciously or not, that artists should be punished and put down for making art, but the trend of the age is against that.

Between dealers, curators and collectors there is, self-evidently, a certain community of interest, but there can also be a community of feeling. Without the equivalent of co-production in the art world, traveling exhibitions might not travel, landmark catalogs might never go to the press and the art itself might have at most a local

Since World War II, the idea of cooperation between museums has taken the provinciality out of life in places like Eindhoven, Monchengladbach, Bordeaux and Bern. The curator as impresario has replaced the curator as someone who kept the books and dusted the pictures. Bryan Robertson at the Whitechapel Art Gallery and, more recently, his successor, Nicholas Serota, together with their counterparts in Amsterdam, Rotterdam, Otterlo, Basel, Edinburgh and elsewhere, have given a completely new bite and edge to the curator-

We have also seen the arrival of a new kind of professional - the we have also seen the arrival of a new kind of professional—the free-lance curator who brings something remarkable (or, at the least, ambitious) into town and goes away again. The Swedish-born Pontus Hulten, first director of the Pompidou Center, was such a person, and his appointment as director of the Palazzo Grassi in Venice (with Fiat money behind him) may lead to startling results. Christos Hoschingedes, a Greek now resident in Berlin, is someone else who Joachimedes, a Greek now resident in Berlin, is someone else who has thought big (not always to universal satisfaction) and carried his ideas through to fulfillment. The Swiss-born Harald Szeeman is a third example of the free-lance curator who puts on exhibitions the way Max Reinhardt put on "The Miracle" after World War I — in unexpected places, on a huge scale, and in defiance of routine.

A great deal of money goes riding on the shifts of taste in which dealers, auctioneers, curators, collectors and occasionally critics have a hand. There are untold amounts of funny money - money that has to go somewhere and can often be put away more discreetly in works of art than in most of the other ways that he within the law.

Profit-taking exists in art, as much as in the stock market, and anyone who holds a position of power in the art world is bound wittingly or not — to influence the movement of prices

But conspiracy? Corruption? Conflict of interest? These ideas have yet to be proved, singly or collectively. What would have to be demonstrated is not a piece of financial finagling of the kind that came out recently when Christie's admitted to having misstated the facts about an important sale. Instead, we should be talking about the systematic long-term manipulation of taste.

It has doubtless been tried, but I doubt that it ever came off in more than one or two cases and for more than a season or two. There is such a thing as the uncontaminated consensus of disinterested observers, and that consensus cannot be counterfeited. Besides, the fact that many people prefer bad art to good art is not a matter for criminal prosecution but an ingredient in the human comedy, one by which other people will always know how to profit.

There is, moreover, in the furtherance of good art an evangelical element that, though not to be overstated or presumed upon, has played its part in the new situation. I do not believe that the success of the Museum of Modern Art's international program in the 1950s was directly related to the Cold War, as has lately been alleged. But survivors of the period will remember that the museum's traveling exhibitions of the 1950s came at precisely the time when the United States stood alone as the fountain of all good things, from CARE packages to the perfected zipper. For that and other reasons, the European public was disposed to respond to the new American art

Furthermore, everyone likes to feel part of a privileged group, semi-secret society of the discerning. The wish to hang together is fundamental to human nature. Few human beings are exempt from the terror of being conspicuously wrong, and one of the best ways not to be wrong is to follow the others. We feel comfortable with what we know, and with what others know that we know, and for better or worse that sensation is available in full measure in museums of HESE are the negative and incidentally ridiculous reasons for the general international readiness to pretend that, where art is concerned, one size fits all, from Alaska to New South Wales. There is also the fact that for all its diversity the art now most often seen in modern museums has something in common. More often than not, it is big in scale, forthright in statement, strong in feeling, and public rather than private in its mode of expression. (Artists who worked small, such as the late Joseph Cornell or the sculptor Joel Shapiro in an earlier day, are disadvantaged in this

History suggests, however, that the accepted view of late 20thcentury art will be dismantled just as the view of 19th-century art that prevailed even a generation ago is being taken to pieces and worked over. Examples of 19th-century art that were regarded as worthless in the 1950s have crept back into the great museums. Those century collection now differs, moreover, from one museum to

Lorient this week, driving the heathen before

But for the Cornish and the Galicians, Lorient is a part of a larger world that, finally, recognizes and encourages their par-ticularism. "Minorities in their own countries, these people are the majority here."
Pichard says, adding, however, that the festival rejects any tinge of racism or sectarianism. "We've suffered enough from that our-

Fair enough so far, from the craggy point of view of the British Isles and Brittany, but what in the name of Cuchulainn and the great god Lug are the Galicians doing here? Spanish Celts? In red and black boleros, white trousers and high boots?

"Yes, yes, we feel a close connection with the other Celtic countries," says Xan R. Silvar, leader of the Raparigos baggipe and drum group.

The Galicians are historically part of the the British Celts' migrations south after the Roman collapse and, although the Galician dialect, a mixture of Spanish and Portuguese, has no direct link to the Celtic ongues, the cultural affinity is strongly feit, especially in music.

"When we first heard traditional Irish and Breton music on records in the sixties, we said, 'But this is our music, too,' " Silvar says, mentioning that local legend also tells of Irish "colonies" in Galicia.

The traditional names of Scotland, Ireland. Wales, Brittany, Conrwall, the Isle of Man and Galicia are respectively Alba, Eire, Cymru, Breizh, Kernow, Mannin and Gaiza, but to underline the linguistic contradictions of the Celts, the three "official" languages of the Lorient festival remain En-glish, French and Spanish, all representative of the central governments that are the cause of Celtic troubl

Musically, Celtitude is on firmer ground, but even here the connections are like the spokes of a bicycle wheel, crisscrossing but barely touching. Thus, the bagpipe in its various guises flourishes from its Scottish-Irish stronghold to Brittany, where it is called a biniou, and on to Galicia, where its name is gaita. But the Welsh have little use for the instrument (are their ears too sensi-tive?), preferring the Celtic harp, which makes them musical cousins to Scottish and Breton harpists. Wales also shares a long choral tradition with Galicia, but not much else, while the Manx and Cornish honor the fiddle and the accordion or melodeon.

Nevertheless, there is a sound to all this that is decidedly different from the rest of Europe: the pentatonic scale, the sudden shifts from major to minor and back again, the open-ended "form" (excluding pub sing-ers, who are hemmed in by lyrics, the Celtic musician plays as he drinks, not particularly caring where to stop) and the ideal of impro-visation that is the basis of much of the istic especially of Irish fiddling and thate

CCORDING to Pichard, the Celts, cut A off from the European mainstream, conserved incient musical modes that were lost in the rest of Europe, Galician jam sessions, with three bagpines and two drums, show a split personality; some of the airs are hardly distinguishable from, say, a Scottish reel, others definitely "south of the border in inspiration.

Poetry and storytelling are important and were represented in Lorient by Alain Le Goff, a Breton bard who declaimed all week before beery audiences in public squares his yarns of the sea and the legendary city of Ys, the Celtic Atlantis. Breton authors also had their night, as did the Cornish singer of sea chanteys and love songs, Brenda Wootton, who, physically and vocally, can fill any void in Cornish culture.

Lorient itself, an important fishing port, was ready for the onslaught and the estimated 250,000 spectators it attracted during the week. The city, 85 percent destroyed in World War II (the Germans had a major submarine base here), was reconstructed in Breton Modern, neither the best nor the worst example of postwar urban renewal.

Before the City Hall, in something called the Celtic Village — simply a series of stands selling snacks, from grilled sardines to Cornish pasties — politics arrived last Saturday in the form of the French Culture Minister lack Lang. Skipping the sardines for a co-triade (a kind of Breton bouillabaisse), Lang braved the wrath of Breton militants, promising bilingual road signs in Brittany and the creation next year of a state exam in Breton for aspiring secondary-school teachers.

But the Bretons, the moving force of the Neo-Celtic Revival, are as divided as the other Celtic peoples in their vision of the future. Between the bombs of the irish Republican Army and the strictly nonviolent cultural renaissance in Galicia, there appears to be no common assent about how further to organize Celtia.

One way would be economic. A series of conferences were held here on developing trade among the Celtic countries, byper of course, Paris and London — and Brussels. One does not imagine that the Eurocasts worry much about this, especially when the Ceits themselves cannot agree on such matters as the length and weight of objects to be heaved and thrown during the interackic Games that were part of the festival.

But despite some false cultural notes and a certain amount of wishful thinking in the idea of Celtia, the peoples of the seven "netions" sense a community of spirit that somehow makes them collectively "differ ent." The first Indo-Europeans to arrive in central and northern Europe, they may be the last to lose sight of their common roots. In their outposts on the sea, they have, when the music stops long enough for reflection, a 3,000-year-old memory. The Celts are the elephants of Europe: Lumbering toward their watering holes, they do not forget.

FOR FUN AND PROFIT

Getting Your Money Back If Travel Firms Default

EW YORK - Paying for travel is easy. But trying to get your money back when a travel compa-ny defaults can be one of the most frustrating and fruitless of experiences. You may wait years as bankruptcy proceedings slog through the courts, and even when a ruling is handed down in your favor, there may not be enough money to repay you.

Sometimes travelers are lucky. As described by Leslie Trott, manager of special projects for the American Society of Travel Agents, such was the case in December 1983. when Specific Tours of Los Angeles, which operated tours to the South Pacific, filed for protection under the Federal Bankruptcy Code and suspended operations. Specific Tours was a participant in ASTA's Tour Payment Protection Plan, established in March 1982. This meant, among other things, that the company had posted a $100,000 bond or the equivalent. It was this money, Trott said, that was used to repay in full everyone who had bought a Specific Tours package through a travel agency that is a member of ASTA but had not yet left.

In recent years there have been several major cases in which both consumers and travel agents suffered because of defaults or because companies, without going bankrupt, simply curtailed operations sharply or suspended them. Laker, Continental Air Lines, Braniff International, Air Florida, Value Vacations, Travel Headquarters, Jet Exchange - these are some of the names that are well known to travelers who either were stranded far from home or found that the tickets they had bought were worthless.

How to improve the situation is a major issue in the U.S. travel industry. Everyone seems to agree that current default protection is tokenism, at best. Yet most attempts to do more have been thwarted by fear of ruinous costs. For example, under a 1982 agreement, more than 100 U.S. airlines promised, under certain circumstances, to honor the tickets of a defaulting carrier. The agreement collapsed, however, when Continental filed for reorganization under the Bankruptcy Code and sharply cut operations. Few airlines would honor Continental tickets, contending that the line had not actually defaulted.

Some travel agency conglomerates, such as the American Express network, provide their own airline default protection for travelers who purchase tickets through them. Meanwhile, some default insurance is available to the general public through travel agencies. Without insurance, your chances of default protection depend on the type of travel you buy and how and where you buy it. Here is a rundown of some situations you could face:

Risks With Tour Packages: If a tour operator defaults, you could be in trouble on several grounds. If your trip has already begun, you may find that hotels will no longer honor the prepaid vouchers that the operator issued you, and you may have difficulty getting an airline to honor your ticket home. While you will have prepaid your trip in full, except for incidentals, the operator may not have passed on more than a deposit to the airlines and hotels. It is hotel and airline pressure on the operator to pay overdue bills that often causes defaults in the first place.

If the default occurs long before you are scheduled to leave home, probably only a deposit is at stake. Within a few weeks of departure, however, you are likely to have paid in full and could lose everything. Even the $100,000 bond required by ASTA's Tour Payment Protection Plan may not be available to help, because by latest count the plan had only 47 participants, and you would have had to have purchased your tour through an ASTA member agency. A similar $100,000 bond for consumer protection is required of all members of the United States Tour Operators Association, but they num-ber only 37 — mostly giants of the industry whose chances of default are considered slim. Yet thousands of other companies and individuals operate tours, many of them offshoots of neighborhood travel agencies — and that is where problems are likeliest. Protection for Air Charters: Though many travelers are wary of charters because the chance of delays and other inconveniences may be higher than with scheduled airlines, on paper they offer greater default protection than tour operation generally. Federal regulations require a charter operator to post a $200,000 surety bond and to keep payments from travelers in an escrow account until a trip is completed. Problems have occurred when the operator or the bank does not scrupulously observe the escrow rule and the operator suspends business, leaving an empty till. If you are buying a charter trip directly from the operator, therefore, be sure that your check made out to the escrow account at the specified bank. Never pay for a charter in cash or by credit card, advises Thomas A. Dickerson, a consumer-oriented travel lawyer, since you have no assurance where the money will land. Defaults of Travel Agencies: Existing default-protection plans won't help if your travel agent goes bankrupt or, as sometimes happens, simply disappears. Your chances of recourse diminish even further if your agency is not at least accredited to, and in good standing with, the Airlines Reporting Corp., a regulatory trade group and ticket clearing house that requires payments every seven days. Agencies accredited to the corperation must post a bond of $10,000 to $50,000, depending on sales volume, to cover payments for tickets issued just before default occurs.

Protection plans exist, but pitfalls are frequent

This bond means that if you hold such an unused ticket, the airline will probably honor it. However, if you paid the agency for a ticket but never received it, you are out the money. And you also might have difficulty if your ticket is marked nonrefundable or nonendorsable to any other airline, since that may be interpreted as a sign that you paid less than an established fare.

Many hotels show little tolerance for travel agencies that don't pay their bills promptly, even if they don't default. Therefore, unless you are buying a reduced-rate package that requires prepayment in full, ask your agent to accept only one night's deposit for each hotel stay, or better still, a creditcard number to guarantee payment for the first night. Then, should the hotel refuse to accept the voucher the agent gives you, at most you will be out only one night's money.

Whether a voucher is accepted often comes down to a business decision by the botel," Ray Greenly of ASTA said. "It's a matter of how much goodwill they get from accepting it against how much they are going to lose out of their pocket."

associated with Kritika, probably the most prestigious Polish underground quarterly.

But while the police may be intensifying their efforts to quash the country's under-ground culture, the writers and artists are branching out. Nova, one of the clandestine publishing houses, is producing and distributing audio tapes carrying speeches, patriotic songs and humorous satirical monologues by people such as Jacek Fedorowicz. Fedorowicz, once Poland's foremost television personality, has been supporting himself since martial law was declared by selling his comic paintings in churches and factories. It is widely believed — and he does not exactly deny the assertion — that he drew and wrote a hard-cover comic book portraying Solidarity's creation and its subsequent suppres-

In another recent innovation, Solidarity Underground's radio division has developed the technical capability to insert slogans and instructions into government television pro-grams. Some weeks ago, viewers in a Warsaw suburb were surprised to see the slogan "Solidarity lives" flash over the commentators' heads on the nightly news broadcast.

There is also the case of "The Interrogation," a film made by Ryszard Bugajski, who is in the process of emigrating to Canada. The film, detailing the prison torture of woman in the 1950s, was made in a prison during the free period when Solidarity flourished. Before it could be released, martial law was imposed. Prints of the movie were ordered destroyed, but at least one survived. It is being shown to the informal videoclub groups that gather to view that and other unsanctioned tapes.

has been to make the products of officially sanctioned culture more candid and critical and thus more competitive. While much of the writing in the clandestine publications is supplied by unpaid volunteers, their publishers still pay the better-known authors royalties and are said to make money. With few esteemed living writers willing to risk their credibility by submitting to censorship, the official publishing houses are producing more and more works by dead but once forbidden authors. For example, a big seller last year was Maurycy Mochnacki's two-volume "History of the Polish Uprising," a bitterly anti-Russian history printen in 1822 bitterly anti-Russian history written in 1832 and not published in Poland since 1862. An anthology of Jewish poetry in Polish, pre-pared for publication 25 years ago but held by the editors, has finally appeared. At the same time, curbs on sexual themes and nudi-ty have been relaxed. A few years ago, Playboy was seized at the airport; now calendars printed by government printers and advertising government enterprises regularly show photographs of naked women.

Theater and the movies are most visibly free of official restrictions. Nearly every the ater piece and cabaret act offers digs at government policies and ironic references to prices or economic reform. One highly acclaimed and very bitter play, "Clowns, picts a circus in which everyone has to be a clown. As the actors cavort gymnastically about the stage, gradually shedding their makeup, an iron cage is constructed around them. When the last bar is in place, a voice offstage announces, "And now, do whatever you like." One Warsaw theatergoer commented, "If they didn't allow any criticism, there'd be no theater at all."

Ithaca: Odysseus' Craggy Island Home

by Edward Tick

My home is on the peaked seamark of Ithaca Under Mount Neion's windblown robe of leaves, in sight of other islands . . . I shall not see a place on earth more dear . . .

"ITH these words, in Homer's "Odyssey," Odysseus revealed his identity and homeland to V King Alkinoos on the last leg of his 10-year journey home from the Trojan

Odysseus was returned to Ithaca by a ship of Phaeacians whose men, in Homer's words, "bent forward at the oars and caught the sea as one man, stroking," Today, a ferry crosses from Patras or Kellini on the western coast of the Peloponnesus to the largest of the seven islands, Cephalonia. On this crossing, through sea haze and the glare of sun off blue-gray waters, the first sighting of Ithaca may be as it was on Odysseus' return about 3,000 years ago. A high gray crag, rocky and desolate, rises out of the Ionian Sea like a mammoth whale, swathed in mist and mys-

Cephalonia, often called the island of wonders, is green and lush with high mountains and deep valleys planted with orange, lemon and olive groves. Crossing roads that snake up, down and around the verdant island, a bus arrives in the village of Same on the eastern shore. Across the channel to the northwest lies Ithaca. One ferry a day, arriving from Patras, leaves Same at about 5:30 P.M. for Vathy, Ithaca's port.

The channel between Cephalonia (its name is sometimes transliterated as Kephallenia) and Ithaca is only a mile wide, but it is a long, slow ferry ride around the southern tip of the second-smallest island in the Ionian chain. Ithaca's rocks are studded with bushy growth, broken occasionally by nar-row goat paths that plunge straight down to the sea. Numerous coves containing small, protected beaches, resemble the one where Odysseus landed with his gifts of bronze and gold treasure. As Homer described it (in the Robert Fitzgerald translation):

Of high rock, breaking sharply, hunch around

Making a haven from the plunging surf . . . On the inmost shore, an olive tree Throws wide its boughs over the bay; nearby, A cave of dusky light is hidden . . .

After an hour of circling the desolate lowr peninsula of Ithaca without sight of vilage or farm, the ferry enters a deep bay from he northeast. In the shelter of the bay is Varhy, Ithaca's only port and home of half the island's population of 4,000.

Vathy rings its bay like a horseshoe. The ferry pulls through the narrow harbor entrance guarded on the east by ancient gun emplacements set into the hills. It docks by the Town Hall and tourist office on the western side of a quay lined with single-masted fishing vessels and dinghies painted in bright whites, reds and greens.

Vathy's main avenues, Odisseos, Pinelopis, Tilemachou, Laertou (as the maps and guidebooks show them), recall the ancient family that made the island famous. Shorter terraced streets begin along the harbor front and pass two hotels, Odysseus on the western loop, Mentor on the eastern; art and textile shops; a bank, pharmacy and restaurants and back-street groceries set among white-washed houses roofed with red tiles. The streets finally fade into vineyards and olive groves in the surrounding hills.

TOT long after the ferry docks, Apollo's chariot, the sun, shimmering like a shield of molten gold, races over the western hills, turning a burnished red as it dips below the horizon toward Cephalo-

Dusk in Vathy. In the seaside tavernas on Estathion Dracoli Square, wizened local fisherman tell tales of the sea and enjoy coffee, ouzo and pastries. The omnipresent backgammon game — tavli, the Greeks call it — appears. Political arguments rise from small groups huddled around tiny tables.

A modern Telemachus, dressed in white, struts through the square carrying his grand catch of the day by the gills, showing it off to everyone he meets. Carts from the villages arrive and parents in peasant garb lecture their fidgety children. A landscape painter from Athens applies the last dabs of color to the darkening waters on his canvas before packing his paints for the day. In the dis-tance, lights flicker and cluster like constella-tions against the black backdrop of the hills.

Morning in Vathy may be overcast or sunny, for Ithaca lies west of the mainland and is open to the sea. It thus has more rain than most other parts of Greece, giving it a year-round mild climate and lush vegetation. in mid-May, with the temperature hovering between 80 and 90 degrees, the residents say,

'It is still winter here.' Among the places worth visiting in and around Vathy are the Vathy Museum, with an extensive collection of vases excavated from two shrines at nearby Aetos, the Grotto of the Nymphs (half a mile west of Vathy) and the Fountain of Arethusa (three miles south of the town), both identified with scenes in "The Odyssey." But more exciting than these are the clues to the life and times of Odysseus to be found elsewhere.

A narrow isthmus, less than 2,000 feet wide, connects the northern and southern halves of Ithaca and shows its shape to be a double island. The western road leaves the harbor and winds up the edge of the horse-shoe ring, circling the northern shore of the lower half of Ithaca. About three miles from Vathy, a road forks in from the left. This road climbs steeply to the pinnacle of the hill named Actos, height 2,195 feet. On this hill, around 1868. Heinrich Schliemann, the archaeologist who discovered ancient Troy.

THE BUSH MANHOOD?

OF BUND TRUST? NO, BUT IT WAS A WEEKEND. EVERYTHING

Ithaca, from the coast road near Stavros.

went searching for Odysseus' palace. He did not find the king's court, but unearthed the walls of buildings that formed part of the post-Mycenaean settlement of Alakomenai Past this site, the road plummets to one of Ithaca's many pleasant beaches.

Beyond the isthmus, the road continues long the western face of the island, with the heights of Mount Neriton overhead on the east and steep drops to low-lying beaches and scattered houses on the west. Across the channel, much of Cephalonia, from Same toward the south to its northern point at Fiscardo, is visible. This wide view is reputedly why Odyssens' father, Laertes, chose the smaller, rougher island as the seat of his kingdom. In his day, Cephalonia and other islands were part of the Laertian-Odyssean kingdom. Ithaca, with its craggy peaks and central location in the island group, provided vistas from which the entire kingdom could be surveyed.

The road passes through the quiet hamlet of Lefki to arrive in Stavros, 11 miles from Vathy. From the central crossroads in Stavros, a northbound road leads through the remote village of Sholi Ornou to emerge in a wide, northern-facing cove with the beautiful Afales beach. West of Sholi Ornon, but approached by the same road out of Stavros is Exogi (Old Church) perched on a moun-tain. An eastern road from Stavros leads through Frikes and past its rock-studded bay polka-dotted with dinghies. Beyond is the lishing village of Kioni, nestled in its cove, with streets beginning at the water's edge and rising sharply into the hillsides above. Kioni has four sunny rock beaches and, on points looking east toward the mainland, three windmills, now mused.

The western road out of Stavros winds downward to the bay of Polis. There, when the weather leaves the clear waters calm, a swim 50 yards out from the beach provides a full view of the remaining walls and founda-tions of an underwater city. Polis Bay was once larger and in the classical period was a port of call for Greek ships bound for Italy. "Hundreds of ships," Homer says, "are beached on sea-girt Ithaca."

In Odysseus' time, the underwater city was a thriving port community. There is some evidence that this was the harbor of the Odvssean palace from which his son Telemachus set forth to search for his father. Across the channel, Same can be seen a mile away. Near the opposite shore is a tiny islet called Daskalion, thought to have been Asteris, where Penelope's suitors lay in ambush for Telemanchus, "planning the death plunge." In caves around the Bay of Polis and on Pelikata Hill, about one-half mile north of Stavros, British archaeologists in about 1932 discovered Mycenaean walls and pottery dating from the time of Odysseus.

Near the same site north of Stavros is a museum, locked most of the time. In the square of Stavros, inquiry must be made in the school or one of the tavernas for Fontini Kouvaras, the museum keeper. Mrs. Kouvaras, a South African, with her husband, a local schoolmaster, have been volunteer keepers of the Stavros museum for the last 20 years. She escorts curious travelers from all over the world, at a rate of about one a day, through the plaster one-room museum whose leaking roof has caused the ruin of urns 2,000 years old. She carefully and lovingly points out the many treasures of her small museum that were found in Polis, on Pelikata, or dug up by local peasants tending their gardens.

A wooden cabinet holds the museum's archeological treasure. It is the only shard in existence bearing Odysseus' name that dates from his own time, suggesting that he may have been a historical as well as mythological figure. Also in the museum is an Attic lekythos bearing portraits of Athena, Odysseus and Telemachus.

Mrs. Kouvaras leads the way to a nearby olive grove from which bays can be viewed to the north, east and west. She cites the references to this view in Homer and points beneath thick, gnarled, ancient trees to a line of three squared-off boulders, each heading a stone wall that snakes through the orchard. These, the local people believe, were cornerstones of the palace of Odysseus. Here, as described by Nikos Kazantzakis in his modern sequel to "The Odyssey,"

Odysseus reached his hairy hands in his wild

And double-barred his copper-banded groan ing gates . . . It seemed the guardian lions moved their strong jaws.

On the northern road out of Stavros is a sign reading Homer's School. A village guide in the center of an unmowed field and smaller stones surrounding them in the shape of an amphitheater. Here, it is believed, Homer came to gain inspiration, instruct aspiring poets and compose and recite verses of his ETURNING south from Stavros, about halfway back to Vathy, a road cuts into the face of Mount Neriton in fiddler's elbow fashion. It is graveled and slippery. The climb by motorbike up the three and a half miles is heart-straining; the climb by taxi takes an hour. Partly up is an archaeological site unmarked on maps, Laertes Farm. This is the "loved orchard" of Odysseus' father, ripe with olives, figs and musk-grapes. In Kazantzakis' epic, Laertes returned to this place in his final moments of life to sow fistfuls of seed in rain-soaked soil.

The monastery summit, 1,969 feet high, is crowded with goats herded by an old couple in traditional dark dress. If the priest is in residence, the treasured El Greco icon, "Jesus Being Led to Martyrdom," can be viewed. The heights offer a magnificent view of all of Ithaca — its two large peninsulas, its skinny isthmus. Vathy like a toy village far below and everywhere, in blues, greens and grays, the splendid "wine-dark sea."

With the passing of the Odyssean king-dom, Ithaca disappeared as a site of historical importance in the development of Greece. But Ithaca, craggy, sea-girt, sparsely populated gave birth to the first hero in estern civilization who triumphed by shrewd intelligence rather than brute strength. This tiny island, unrestored, as are so many ruined sites in Greece, seems still to perch in the mist of myth.

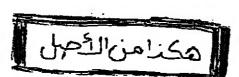

The 7 A.M. ferry pulls out of Vathy harbor under the cloudy gloom." It is leaving a land where, as the poet Cavafy wrote in "lonian Song," "the gods did not die" but rather, "a vigor from their life moves through your air."

New Software Is Key To Wind-Shear Radar

By DAVID E. SANGER

NEW YORK - No sooner had wind shear been identified as the probable cause of the Delta Air Lines L-1011 crash that killed 133 people last week than several government and industry experts asserted that the accident was probably avoidable.

They said existing technology, in the form of Doppler radar equipment, could track movements of the deadly "microbursts" of air capable of thrusting a low-flying plane to the ground. But budgetary politics and bad planning, they said, have delayed installation of the system.

When pressed, however, both the manufacturers of Doppler radar systems and some meteorologists concede that significant refinements in technology are needed before airport systems can go into production, even though a research version was a system called Nexrad (for Next Generation Radar) that has developed experimental set-ups ideal for detecting tornados, hurricanes and other large storm systems. But in its current configuration, the system is not suited for airports - where faster, more accurate radar is needed and where trucks, taxing planes and buildings create "ground clutter" that can interfere with the detection system. More important, almost no work has been done on the com-onter software needed to interpret microbursts and provide a quick warning to flight controllers and pilots.

"It's not an issue of technical breakthroughs because we have the framework for the system," said Stephen Delligatti, who heads the Sperry Corp.'s effort to beat Raytheon Corp. as the prime contractor for Nexrad. "But to make a really workable airport system, there is a lot of work to do."

ADAR measures the distance to an object by timing the round trip of a microwave signal. If the signal is strong, it means the target is dense — such as a heavy rainstorm. Conventional systems, however, cannot detect motion.

Doppler radar, by contrast, detects motion by comparing the frequency of the pulse it emits with the frequency of the reflected pulse it receives a split second later. The most familiar example of the Doppler effect is the changing pitch of a passing train's

From its antenna, the Doppler system surveys a circular area with a radius of about 200 miles (324 kilometers), drawing a picture of the weather patterns between 10,000 and 70,000 feet (between 3,000 and 21,000 meters) off the ground. But it takes at least 10 minutes to complete the picture. This delay can be deadly an airport.

Microbursts are small and short-lived, and the signal returns from them are often weak," said Anthony Durham, the director of Nexrad for the National Weather Service. "Ideally at an airport, you want a system that covers a lot less territory—maybe 50 miles out—and looks at patterns very close-to the ground." The picture needs to be updated every minute or so. Nexrad, as even its strongest supporters acknowledge, is not yet designed for such a job.

The outlook for early solutions is dim. The competition between Sperry and Raytheon on Nexrad will not end until the middle of next year. It will be mid-1983 before the first proto-types are delivered and it will take at least a year or two more: before the system is modified for amports.

Austerity Urged for Singapore

Sharp Decline In Growth Cited

SINGAPORE - Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew acknowledged Thursday that Singapore's economy had taken its worst fall in 20 years and called residents of the island state to tighten their belts.

Mr. Lee said Singapore's economy shrank 1.4 percent in the second quarter and that the outlook was poor for the rest of the year.

"Our economists have revised their forecast to zero growth for the whole of 1985, provided the U.S.

economy picked up. Otherwise negative growth is likely," he said.
This was a sharp downward revision from earlier government forecasts of a 5- to 6-percent increase in the gross domestic product this year. GDP measures a country's total output of goods and services. minus income from operations

Mr. Lee said that one of the key reasons for the decline was the erosion of Singapore's international competitiveness compared with economic rivals like Taiwan, South Korea and Hong Kong.

Mr. Lee said, "the high costs of doing business, including high wages" had adversely effected the Singapore economy. Another reason was poor economic growth in the United States, which is the island's major trading partner and

"Several sectors of our economy face a decline in demand, like shipyards, oil rigs, oil refining and pet-rochemicals," he said. "We have more capacity than anticipated demand for some years ahead."

He said 36,200 people lost their jobs in the first half of this year. Most were foreign workers, he said. "If they were all Singaporeans, we would be in big trouble," he added. Mr. Lee said Singapore's main task was to increase productivity and reduce costs.

"We must be supple, flexible, and elastic on wages, rents, taxes and fees," he said. Then we shall regain our competitiveness within two years or, at the outside, three

Shucking Myths About Eating Corn

Europeans Learn Maize is More Than Cattle Feed

By Barbara Bell uonal Herald Tribus STRASBOURG - When Peter Schubelin moved here 10 years ago, he planted a few rows of sweet corn in his garden. He had developed a taste for corn on the cob during years of work on Long Island, near New York, but could not find any in Alsace.

Last year, he sold 1.5 million ears of fresh sweet corn in the two-month picking season, making him easily the largest single producer in France. He exported 70 percent of that to 32 cities in West Germany, shipping by re-frigerated truck four times a week through August and Sep-

This season, he expects to sell more than two million ears of fresh corn and is expanding into large-scale production of frozen corn kernels and other corn-related products, such as corn cobs pressed into briquettes to burn like charcoal and fritters, which are deep-fried com batter.

My goal is to colonize Europe with sweet corn," said Mr. Schubelin, a Swiss-born, naturalized American nuclear physicist who moved here to take charge of a French high-energy research lab-

He is the only person in Europe producing "really good" sweet corn, he says, mainly because, under an exclusive con-tract with a U.S. seed company whose name he will not reveal, he is the only one growing Super Sweet hybrids, in which genetic manipulation dramatically retards the conversion of the corn's sugar into starch.

The hardest part of selling sweet com to Europeans is simply getting them to taste it, according to Mr. Schubelin, who constantly fights the misconception that sweet corn is the same as the field corn grown to feed

"In rural areas, people say,
'Oh, somebody's selling sweet corn in the shop, I'll have that at home,' "he said. "They go out to the field and pick some feed corn and boil it and ... well, you'd have to ask a cow how it tastes."

Peter Schubelin is pushing corn on the cob.

His neighbors in the village of Bossendorf, 25 kilometers (15.5 miles) north of Strasbourg, liked sweet corn from their first hesitant tastes and he himself quickly got intrigued by the problems of growing it. After 1979, he phased himself out of the Nuclear Research Center to devote 18hour days to corn and in 1980 founded his Unicorn Sweetcorn

Marketing gimmicks are essential in this battle. He organizes a "little army" of Alsauan youths with hot plates, kettles and corn to offer samples in West German supermarkets, where he says 80 percent of shoppers buy after their first taste. He distributes posters featuring his two photogenic children, Diana, 8, and Rodrigue, 6, and sells a 95-page booklet of sweet-com recipes written by his wife, Mir-

And with each two ears of Unicorn corn, he packages five recipes and two yellow plastic corn-shaped skewers which are jabbed into each end of the cob so that eaters can hold the cob without getting messy fingers. When President Ronald Reagan addressed the European Par-liament here May 8, Mr. Schubelin traded his customary conservative tie and business suit for a Stetson, cowboy boots and Western shirt and was interviewed about the sweet-corn business on Eurovision at a Franco-American friendship festival in Strasbourg's main square, where 5,000 ears of his corn on the cob - frozen last season - were eaten in four hours.

Converting Europeans to sweet-corn eating clearly amuses Mr. Schubelin, 45, but he is dead serious about the quality of his product, which he follows personally from field to consumer. The Super Sweet hybrids - also known as Everlasting Heritage or E.H. varieties - that he plants for all fresh corn are about 30 percent more expensive to grow than other types of sweet corn and yield only half as many ears per hectare, about 20,000, as the others that Mr. Schubelin lumps together as "industrial va-

Ordinary sweet com differs from field corn by genetic manipulation that slows the conversion of sugar into starch in corn on the plant. Super Sweet varieties, however, contain genes that completely block the sugar-tostarch process on the plant and so retard it after picking than an ear of corn, properly refrigerat-(Continued on Page 15, Col. 3)

Shell Group Net Down 17% in Second Quarter

By Bob Hagerty International Herald Tribune LONDON — Royal Dutch/ Shell Group, hit by extraordinary costs in refining, shipping and met-als, reported Thursday an unex-pectedly sharp decline of 17 per-cent in second-quarter net income. The Dutch-British oil giant said net income declined to £646 million (about $872 million) from £778 million a year before, Sales in-creased 6.5 percent, to £15.67 bil-

For 1985's first half, the group reported net income of £1.73 bitlion, down 1.7 percent from £1.76 billion. Sales climbed 11 percent, to £33.18 billion, from £29.98 billion.

As expected, the group made a provision of £100 million for the expected cost of closing a refinery in Curação. In addition, the group made unspecified provisions for morphalling two giant crude-oil mothballing two giant crude-oil tankers in line with efforts to streamline its bloated fleet.

It also made provisions and asset write-downs of £22 million in its metals business.

The group said its underlying performance was much better than the raw figures suggest. Leaving aside the Curação provision, the group said profit on an "estimated current cost of supplies basis, which strips out the effects of changing currency rates on inven-tory values, rose 5.6 percent, to £815 million from £772 million. Without the exceptional items. "they're doing quite well," said David Johnson, an analyst at the Ed-inburgh stockbrokerage of Wood, Mackenzie & Co.

Oil production from fields in , which the group has equity rose 4 percent in the quarter, while gas sales volume grew 3 percent.

In the refining and marketing outlets, profit margins outside North America widened as average sale proceeds declined more slowly than the costs of crude oil and other raw materials. Even so, some analysis had expected a stronger performance.

The profit contribution from Shell Oil, the U.S. unit, shrank to £227 million from £249 million partly because of lower prices for oil products in the United States.

Group operating profit from chemicals slid 30 percent, to £62 million, from £88 million. The downturn partly reflected maintenance work at a petrochemical complex in Moerdijk, the Nether-

The long-suffering metals businesses showed a loss of £58 million, compared with a year-earlier profit of £1 million. The group cited continuing cost of restructuring and streamlining metals operations.

T-Bond Yields Fall at Auction

The Associated Press WASHINGTON - The U.S. Treasury said Thursday that it sold $6.5 billion in 30-year bonds at an average yield of 10.66 percent, the lowest level in more than two years.

The rate for the new issue was down from an average of 11.38 percent for last quarter's issue of 30-year bonds on May 9, and was the lowest rate since 10.29 percent on May 5, 1983.

The sale, which attracted bids totaling $15 billion, was the third and final auction of this week's quarterly refinancing, in which the government raised a record $21.75 billion in new debt financing. Dealers said the "cover," or amount bid above what was actually sold, was "acceptable."

Bundesbank Weighing Rate Cuts, Official Says

By Warren Getler

PARIS - The West German Bundesbank is considering a cut in its two key lending rates, but a decision will largely depend on the direction of the dollar and U.S. interest rates before next Thursday's policy-setting meeting, a se-nior official of the central bank indicated Thursday.

A cut in West German rates is widely anticipated by the Frankinterview that parallel, half-point cuts in the central bank's two key rates - the discount and the Lombard - are under serious considerpend on whether the dollar continues its softer trend and whether the interest-rate differential between the United States and

China Breaks Up Central Treasury After 35 Years

Reuters
BEIJING — China an nounced on Thursday the es-tablishment of a decentralized treasury system in a move that Western bankers said was directed at excessive economic growth and foreign exchange

The China Daily said that treasury departments were being set up at central, provincial and county levels to replace the single central treasury established in 1950. The change is "to ensure efficient handling of the national budget that has become more complex since the implementation of economic reforms," it said.

The new treasuries will be controlled by the People's Bank of China, the central bank, whose president, Chen Muhua, is the head of the central trea-sury, it added. Mr. Chen was appointed president in March and has played a key role in controlling domestic credit and reducing foreign exchange spending since then, one Western diplomat said.

The setting up of the trea-suries under PBC control is a clear sign PBC intends to exert a more powerful influence as the central bank," said one U.S. China's foreign reserves have long-term rates, is currently about 3 points on an unadjusted basis. The Lombard facility, currently at 6 percent, is the rate at which commercial banks get emergency loans from the Bundesbank on deposit of securities as collateral. The discount rate, now 4.5 percent, is the rate at which commercial banks borrow medium term using trea-sury bills as collateral.

With money-market rates approaching parity with the discount rate, West German financial markets are convinced that the next logical step for the Bundesbank is to cut its lower rate, the discount, by at least one-half point at next week's policy-council meeting, the first after a month-long recess.

The Bundesbank official cautioned, however, that a cut in the discount rate to 4 percent is not a foregone conclusion. But he added that if a cut were to come, it would West Germany can be maintained. involve parallel cuts in the discount.

The differential, as measured by involve parallel cuts in the discount related to banks' refinancing costs.

"At the moment, we're seeing an upward trend in market rates in the U.S., and the dollar hasn't shown much willingness to stay under 2.80 marks," the official said.

With little flexibility to be seen in the tight fiscal policy of Finance Minister Gerhard Stoltenberg, the Bundesbank is expected to face growing calls for lower interest rates to help eradicate sluggishness in the West German economy, particularly in the job market.

However, despite the Bundes bank's interest in providing a boost to the domestic economy where possible, senior officials at the central bank indicate that it remains quite concerned that a lowering of official rates in West Germany could spark large-scale capital out-flows, particularly if the dollar should climb again or if U.S. interest rates were to firm.

The result, the Bundesbank fears, would be a weaker mark and the accompanying threat of a new round of inflation through higher The Bundesbank, sources close to the central bank say, does not want to be faced with the potential embarrassment of having to lift rates soon after a rate cut. Separately, the Bundesbank official noted that the German economy appears to have picked up considerable steam in the second quarter, after a dismal first-quarter performance that was largely attributable to severe weather. Based on June production figures and incoming orders for that month, the official estimated that second-quarter gross national product grew at an annual rate of about 3 percent, compared with an estimated annualized decline of 1.5 percent in the first quarter.

00 14 U.S. Retailers Report DM Futures Poor Sales During July Options The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The top U.S. retailers reported on Thursday poor sales for July compared with a year earlier.

Sears, Roebuck & Co., the largest, said its sales for the four weeks ended Aug. 3 fell 0.6 percent. K mart Corp., the No. 2 retailer, said its sales for the month rose 4.1 percent. But sales for stores open more than a year — cailed same-store sales — fell 5.9 percent.

J.C. Penney Co., ranked third, said its four-week sales declined 0.6 percent. F.W. Woolworth Co., No. 8, said its four-week sales increased 3 percent. Wal-Mart Stores Inc., ranked seventh, said its sales spurted 34.7 percent, with same-store sales up 12 percent.

July's sales reflected continuing softness in the U.S. economy and highly compensive conditions in the general merchandise industry, said Edward R. Telling, chairman and chief executive officer of Chicago-based Sears.

Jeffrey Feiner, an analyst with the New York investment firm Merrill Lynch, Pierce Feiner & Smith Inc. said the July sales, "continued the disappointing trend that has been evidence four the last several months."

ond-quarter results. On the basis of stated first-quarter results, however, it earned an indicated 186,2 million kronor in the second quarter, virtually unchanged from 182 mil-lion kronor in the first quarter,

Sales rose to an indicated 865.7 million kronor from 838.1 million kronor in the first quarter. Analysts termed the results dis-appointing. With earnings up only 17 percent in the first quarter, one said, Pharmacia will have to boost second-half earnings by more than 20 percent to meet its own forecast for the year.

Pharmacia said its biotechnology business recorded the fastest growth in the half, with sales up 33 percent, to 420.9 million kronor. Health care, the company's largest business area, posted a 23-percent sales rise, to 1.172.2 billion kronor,

By division, the company said that rapid growth was posted by its opthalmics unit, with sales up 42 percent, and by the hospital-products division, where sales rose 45

Dollar Eases Lower as Pound Gains

NEW YORK - The dollar continued to drift lower in inactive trading Thursday, reflecting nervousness over the Treasury's 30-jor upward or downward move. The British pound, meanwhile, rose following reports that the central Bank of England had intervened in the markets Wednesday to stabilize the British currency and on renewed speculation that the European Monetary System float arrangement would be realigned. In London, the pound closed at from $1.3400 on Wednesday.

"Sterling moved ahead at the exyear bond auction. Dealers said the pense of the dollar." one dealer said. "Most attention focused on markets were also awaiting further data on which to base another ma- the pound as the market awaited results of the U.S. Treasury's bond

Major U.S. Airlines Will Raise Fares

By Sarah Oaces

Washington Pass Service
WASHINGTON — Air travelers will have to search harder for bargains as a result of decisions by major U.S. airlines to increase both discount and regular fares later this

United Airlines, the largest U.S. carrier, will boost all of its discount super-coach fares and two-thirds of its regular fares by $2 to $70 for. tickets purchased after Aug. 16. Eastern Air Lines, American Airlines, Republic Airlines, Delta Air Lines and other carriers plan to raise some rates to coincide with the United increase. Since the introduction of air-fare discounting in 1977, travelers and travel agents have fought to snag discount seats, which can be as much as 70 percent cheaper than a full-fare ticket

Discounts vary greatly today from airline to airline but, in general, the farther a ticket is bought in advance, the greater the savings.

U.S. airlines have profited from the complex strategy of balancing discount and full-fare customers to fill their planes. According to Airline Economics Inc., 84 percent of: months of this year came from tickets sold at discount fare. About half of all revenue comes from business sell at what price." 15 minutes before flight time to determine whether seats can be sold at the discount price.

Airline officials say that the new fares are pegged to the distance flown but admit that factors such as competition and popularity of the route contribute to the pricing of a flight.

"Fares are really based on a combination of mileage and competi-tion," said Robert Coggin, assistant vice president of marketing development at Delta.

Plans by airlines to increase the price of bargain seats indicate that their popularity has grown so much that the industry is confident that travelers on limited budgets will fight for the discount seats even at ightly higher prices, according to industry analysts.

Although some airlines have added special discount plans, many of which are similar to United's new "Super 14" plan that allows a traveler to save about 45 percent if the ticket is bought two weeks in advance, the lowest-price tickets are going up more rapidly than full-fare tickets at most airlines.

Aug. 24, according to Mr. Coggin. American will raise prices of its lowest fares by $20 for each round trip. Some fares will drop in markets where American faces stiff competition from other carriers. People Express, the no-frills, dis-

CINEMA OF PARADOX: French Filmmaking Under the German Occupation

By Evelyn Ehrlich. 235 pages. Illustrated. $25. Columbia University Press, 562 W 113th Street, New York, N. Y. 10025.

Reviewed by John Gross

WHATEVER else may have been amiss in France in the late 1930s, it was a brilliant epoch for cinema. Despite its rickety financial condition, the French film industry turned out a remarkable number of outstanding movies during those years, some as good as any ever made; in the summer of 1939, for example, the new releases included "Le Jour se lève" and "La Regle du jeu."

Then came war and Nazi domination. During the phony war of 1939-40, only a handful of ing the phony war of 1939-40, only a handrill of films were made, and after the fall of France the prospects looked even bleaker. To all appearances, the French cinema was faced with something close to complete destruction. Yet during the four years that followed, the industry recovered and even flourished. By the time of the liberation, more than 200 feature films had been recovered and the property of them of high had been produced, many of them of high quality, some of them classics; new talents had emerged, new traditions had been developed. This is the first of the paradoxes Evelyn

Ehrlich sets out to examine in her study of filmmaking during the occupation. A second, related paradox is that most of the films produced, and virtually all the ones of any note. were made in the occupied zone, under direct Nazi rule. (In unoccupied Vichy France, by coutrast, attempts to establish a major production center — "Hollywood on the Côte d'Azur" — ended in failure.)

Moreover, one of the companies occupying a central position in the French cinema of the period. Continental, was set up by the Ger-mans. Ehrlich has some valuable pages on Continental and on the little-known figure who ran it: Alfred Greven, a former German pro-ducer and a close friend of Hermann Goring. Greven was interested in making money, not propaganda, and only 2 or 3 of the 30 films produced under his auspices aroused objections from the Resistance. Indeed, since it was not subject to Vichy censorship, Continental offered its filmmakers greater artistic freedom than any other company operating at the time (another paradox), and on occasion they even managed to slip in a veiled patriotic message. Earlier writers have tended to treat the pas-were to take his comments at face value you would assume that the Nazis' policy was directed toward stealing talent from the French for their own studios and confining the native French output to the merest froth. Why did they permit and even positively encourage a high level of production? Ehrlich, who has made use of many previ-

sages dealing with the French cinema in Joseph

Goebbels' diaries as a key source, and if you

ously unexamined German documents, concludes there were two main reasons. In the early years of the occupation, for strategic reasons — they did not want to have to divert military resources from the Soviet Union or North Africa — the Germans favored giving the French a fair degree of latitude in general. They also believed a thriving French film industry would enable them to compete effective. dustry would enable them to compete effec-tively with the United States in the internation-al market, establishing an opening that would ultimately be used to insure the purchase of their own films. Whether they realized it or not, French filmmakers were meant to be serving long-term German interests.

It could of course be argued that the very act of making films under the Nazi dispensation was morally offensive; however much you med to ignore the fact, you were giving comfort to the devil. But at least it can be claimed on the other side that none of the films made during the occupation offered the Germans explicit support, and that only one full-length feature—an attack on Freemasonry called "Forces Occupies"—was made at their direct behave Occultes" - was made at their direct behest.

Most of the films produced were staple com-mercial fare, but the more ambitions ones represented a marked departure from the char-acteristic achievements of the prewar French acteristic achievements of the prewar French cinema. Ehrlich sums up the change neathy: "Where once the lined and irregular features of Jean Gabin had suffered in the misty lower depths of the French urban landscape, the classical perfection of Jean Marais's profile now reigned over the countryside of some indefinable era of France's past." Movies like "Les Visiteurs du Soir" ushered in a new emphasis on fantasy and allegory, and a new way of looking at things — theatrical, stylized, remote.

This was the reigning sensibility in French movies until the 1950s, when a new generation turned against what it called "the cinema of quality" (and it did not intend the phrase as a compliment). Today, most of the products of this era are still out of fashion, and some look decidedly pretentious. But their historical interest is indisputable — it is hard to believe a moment like the one in "Les Visiteurs du Soir" when the lowers' hearts go on heating after they when the lovers' hearts go on beating after they have been turned to stone will ever lose its place in the mythology of the occupation years—and perhaps the time has come for a critical reassessment as well.

Such a reappraisal is not part of Ehrlich's purpose. She is more concerned with the conditions under which films were made, and her book is chiefly valuable for the information it supplies about the tangled history of personal-ities, attitudes and institutions. But when she does pause to examine an individual work—
Henri-Georges Clouzot's much-denounced masterpiece "Le Corbean" (The Raven), for instance — her comments are almost always illuminating enough to make you wish she had given more space to them.

9 Months of Dispute Took 1 Hour to End

NEW YORK — Negotiators for the baseball players and the club owners said Wednesday that they had resolved nine months of disagreement in only one hour, thus ending the second baseball strike in

The season, which had been interrupted after Monday night's games, will resume Thursday. The 25 games missed will be made up as parts of doubleheaders or on

Shortly after noon Wednesday, the commissioner, Peter Ucberroth, announced that a "tentative understanding" had been reached on a five-year contract. The negotiators then went to the Major League Players Association office, where they put the agreement into contract language. A news conference to announce the agreement was scheduled for 5 P.M., but the lawyers needed much more time with the language, and the formal announcement was not made until

The critical step in the talks came at the start of the 10 A.M. bargaining session at the apartment of Lee MacPhail, the owners' chief negotiator. While seven other members of the negotiating teams waited in separate rooms, Donald Febr, the union chief, and Barry Rona, Mac-Phail's counsel, met privately. Rona told Fehr the owners were willing to drop their demand for a cap on the salary a player could receive from salary arbitration. The players already had indicated a ngness to agree to a change in the eligibility requirement for arbi-

The talks proceeded smoothly and quickly from that point. By the time Ueberroth arrived at Mac-Phail's apartment at about !! A.M., a new collective bargaining agreement, to replace the one that expired Dec. 31, had been worked out. Ueberroth, who had said he could not allow a strike, congratushook hands.

Although the owners' contribu-tion to the players' benefit plan was eclipsed in recent weeks by the dispute over salary arbitration, the procedure by which a player can have a salary disagreement settled by an arbitrator.

The players agreed to add a year to the eligibility requirement but not until 1987, the third year of the agreement. The only current major leaguers who will be affected by the extra year are those who at the end of this season, will have less than one year in the majors.

Among other elements of the agreement, the owners agreed to abolish the free-agent draft so that free agents may negotiate with all clubs. NEW YORK - The settlement of the baseball strike after just one day has added to the already impressive reputation of the commis-sioner, Peter Ueberroth, as a man who can get things done.

Ueberroth said Wednesday night that he had no role in the events that led to ending the strike. But knowledgeable sources said he had made few mistakes in handling the dispute, and credited him with a series of behind-the-scenes maneuvers that helped smooth the way to settle-

Weeks ago he quietly adopted a policy of leaning toward the union and leaning on the lated the negotiators, and everyone owners as a means of bringing about a settlement. Friends in whom he confided said his reasoning was that since there was no way he could compel the players not to strike, he had to see that the terms offered them were so satisfactory that they would not want to strike.

As for the owners, Ueberroth had concluded and stormy, players struck for 50 commissioner's office to act "in the best interment on the players.

ests of basebali" to compel them to accept certain terms.

Ueberroth did not want to act in such a dramatic fashion, but after he dropped enough hints that he would, the owners became worried. Even the owners' chief negotiator, Lee Mac-Phail, alluded Wednesday night to a fear the owners had of outside intervention. He could only have been talking of the man the owners themselves had hired as commissioner last year,

The owners feared that if the strike went on, Ueberroth might offer his own terms, which the union could accept. The players then would come back to play and the only option the owners would have would be to lock them out, something that undoubtedly would have been highly unpopular with the fans.

After June 1, in a series of clubhouse meetings with the players. Ueberroth made it clear that he was opposed to the owners' proposal for a cap players salaries. He remarked that he thought it was unfair of the owners to blame the of baseball. At this point it seems that there is that, if necessary, he could use the powers of the financial problems caused by their mismanage-

This effectively cut the ground from the owners' key negotiating position, and although Ue-berroth backed them on some of their other positions, he had sent a key signal to the union that it could effectively hold firm against the proposal it hated most — the salary cap.

At the same time, Ueberroth was building strong public support for his position by ap-pearing on numerous television shows to vocally support the opposition most fans felt toward a strike, and to proclaim that he was going to support neither the owners' nor the players' positions but would be the fans' commissioner.

In Wednesday's editions of the New York Times, columnist Ira Berkow remarked that Ueberroth had emerged from the situation with a polished image. He noted that most of the serious proposals that Ueberroth made last week had been accepted, and he added, "Ueberroth all along has said that the fans were his major concern, and that he would act in their benefit above all others - theirs and the game considerable substance behind those glossy re-

Round Europe Race: Costly Boats of Speed

By Jennifer Gill

LA TRINITE SUR MER - The hulled trimarans swung gently with the tide, dwarfing the trawlers and day-sailers moored in this small Brittany fishing village. But aboard the giant sail boats, crews were busily making final preparations before sailing up the English channel and into the North Sea to Kiel, in Germany. There, the Round Europe Race, the first of its kind for open class multibulls, is to start riday.

This race, sponsored and partly financed by the European Community, but mostly financed by the Saudi owned TAG Group, has drawn a fleet of the largest and swiftest racing boats ever to put to sea. Their 3,000-mile (1,864-kilometer) course will take them from Kiel to The Hagne, to Zeebrugge in Belgium, Torquay in England, Lorient in France and Lisbon, to Benalmadena in Spain, Toulon in France and Porto Cervo in Sardinia, where they are due to arrive at early in September. One of the 25 boats entered, the 80-foot (24-meter) catamaran named Formule Tag, holds the record for most miles covered in 24 hours crossing the Atlantic, having averaged just over 21 knots (about 25 miles or 40 kilometers an hour) -a phenomenal figure when com-pared to the 10 knots a singledhulled 40-foot yacht can do under most expensive racing boats ever constructed. The Formule Tag was built in Montreal in 1983, under the direction of the British boat designer, Nigel Irens, and cost 'just under a million Canadian dollars ($735,000 at present rates)," according to Mike Birch, its skipper. The mast, he added, cost "approxi-mately 40,000 dollars," but that is less than one-quarter of the price of the wing mast with which many of the boats now are equipped. "It's regatta conditions. RENO, Nevada - Under the cover of expanding the sport of international bicycle racing into alifornia, a noted Colorado brewry this week sent nearly 100 riders out onto the highways and byways of the Golden State, plus a corner of Nevada, in search of a greater market share for its product. Dorsett, whose problems include an IRS claim of $400,000 in back income taxes and a $250,000 divorce settlement, has not come to training camp. He told the Dallas Times Herald that Schramm promised him two years ago his contract would be renegotiated, and that "once Schramm, found out what my problems were contractually, he leaked my information to the media and made my business public information." Schramm, who claimed "that the things he said are not accurate," has shown at least two reporters copies of Dorsett's contracts. Schramm said . that all Cowboy contracts include a confidentiality clause, but that Dorsett broke his by discussing details of his contract with the media.

New YORK — The news these days is mostly about anniversaries of interesting events that happened long ago. Last week, for instance, it was the 10th anniversary of the Helsinki agreement. This week it's the 40th anniversary of the atomic bombing of languary New the atomic bombing of languary New terms. the atomic bombing of Japan. Next week it will be about the 40th anniversary of Japan's surrender. We had a lot of news in May about the 40th anniversary of Nazi Germany's surrender. That produced a big news bonus because of President Reagan's embarrassing visit to the Bitburg cemetery, where Nazi SS troops were among the German dead.

The Bitburg cemetery visit originally was scheduled because the president had enjoyed such a successful photo opportunity at the Omaha Beach cemetery in 1984 during the 40th anniversary of D-

Unfortunately, only 49 weeks elapsed between the Omaha Beach appearance and the one at Bitburg, so the press was unable to hail the German appearance as the first anniversary of the president's first European-cemetery photo oppor-

Once next week's big story about the 40th anniversary of the Japa-nese surrender is out of the way, we will go on to one of the more interesting anniversaries. The date: Aug. 19. On that day 15 years ago, the decision was made by the bedding industry to cease putting handles on the mattresses of America. Chiropractors, spinal surgeons and manufacturers of plaster casts and steel-reinforced girdles all reported sharp increases in business within weeks after the market was flooded with new mattresses lacking the (abric handles that once had been stoutly affixed to both sides of every decent mattress in the coun-

The decision to drop the mattress handles, little noted at the time it was made, is now intensely controversial. The justification cited by the bedding industry in 1970 was that Americans were becoming dangerously soft as the na-ture of their work became increasingly sedentary and the tendency of their culture increasingly gluttonthat flabby Americans were drop-ping like flies with diseases result-ing from sissified living, diseases their grandparents would have been ashamed to die of, even had they existed in the rugged old days.

The American Bedding Council
—"determined," it said, "to do our bit to save the free world from flab" ordered the mattress handles dropped from their products. "The trymen to handle vast, bulky and intractable mattresses without the assistance of mattress handles should encourage millions to un-dertake physical-conditioning programs that will enable them, after turning their mattresses, to wrestle successfully with the largest and most formidable opponents, including bears."

Industry spokesmen concede that the Bedding Council saw the estimates that forecast hundreds of thousands of back problems, but judged it sensible to accept "a little lumbago and a few popped verte-brae here and there to save the United States from "a devastating

Critics of the decision say this is self-serving nonsense. For one thing, they say, at the time mattress handles were abandoned, the first joggers already were in the streets and 97-pound female weaklings were starting to work on weight-

The Bedding Council, critics say, had no interest in improving the nation's health. It was simply taking advantage of the new muscular-ity to add a few pennies to mattress profits by doing away with the han-

Arguments like this are never settled, not as long as anniversaries roll around every year giving new-speople a pretext for filling their space with lively controversy. This year's ceremony, designed as a pho-to opportunity for the president, was to feature Reagan carrying a king-size mattress, with no handles, from the White House basement to

A Private Audrey Hepburn Remembers William Wyler

Beauty parlors in Tokyo were besieged by bevies of girls wanting the Hepburn haircut (short, with spidery bangs). When she wore an oversized man's shirt or a hateau neckline it became the rage. Smitten by her waiflike figure (due in part to wartime malnutrition), the director Billy Wilder said, "This girl, single-handed, may make bosoms a thing of the past." No one was more surprised by the hoopla than Hepburn. "I remember being very in-volved with the classical ballet, and the movies were really not serious. I did bits in movies, but that was to earn an extra buck. That wasn't going to be my ca-

By now you should know what acting's about. I was so upset. He was so angry with me, I just start-ed to cry. He shot it, gave me a hug and walked off."

Born in Brussels in 1929, Hep-burn was the only child of an English-Irish businessman and a Dutch noblewoman, the Baroness Ella van Heemstra. At the age of 4. Heoburn was sent to a private British school. Her parents divorced in 1935; four years later, Hepburn returned to Arnhem to live with her mother and stayed there during the German occupa-

In the spring of 1948 she re-turned to London hoping for a career in ballet, finding work in revues, nightclubs and chorus ines. In 1951 she appeared as an extra in several British films, including "The Lavender Hill Mob." Then she was spotted in a Monte Carlo hotel lobby by the writer Colette, who exclaimed, "That's my Gigi!"

No one knew how to present her better than Wyler, whose credits include "Jezebel," "Wuth-ering Heights," "Mrs. Miniver," The Best Years of Our Lives, "Ben Hur" and "Funny Girl."

Hepburn worked with other celebrated directors, including Wilder, Fred Zinnemann, King

In 1954, Hepburn married the actor Mel Ferrer. She gave birth to a son, Sean, in 1960, and decided to put her career second: "I started having children and that was so terribly important to me and I couldn't do both."

She returned to the screen in 1962 to collaborate with Wyler on "The Children's Hour." Four years later she starred opposite Peter O'Toole in Wyler's "How to Steal a Million." Neither was as successful as "Roman Horiday."

Now she is anxious to resume her career. "If I read something that I liked, I would love to do it, she said enthusiastically. But she finds the scripts she does read "so dull, more than anything."

Many actors dreaded working with William Wyler. He was known as a nag, a man who would keep the cast and crew for hours. Hepburn said: "I think I was very lucky, because I was sort of Willy's baby. He was very protective of me. He was never rough on me or hard on me or frightened me in any way.
